Leather Specials—Lord & Taylor, New York

From Europe and America we have assembled in our enlarged Leather Section a comprehensive display of smart luggage, so high in quality and moderate in cost as to make the values of unusual interest.

Special attention is directed to our assortment of trunks—every one of which is famous for service and quality the world over. Hartman, INDESTRUCTO, Likly, Vitton, and the Lord & Taylor Special.

The articles pictured here are selected for the particular attention of those who find the Store's mail-order service a convenience—special offerings for the readers of Vogue.

The Lord & Taylor Trunk Special—Made of extra strong bass wood bound in mottled fibre; lined in red keratol. The garment capacity of this trunk is unusually large. Four deep drawers; removable hat compartment; special top to wardrobe compartment gives easy access to the clothing from the top as well as front. This is sold at the exceptionally low price of $40.

The Hartman Berth Trunk—An unusually practical steamer wardrobe trunk. The garment tray swings up, leaving the trunk locked under the berth. Bottom divided in adjustable compartments; linen lined; three-ply veneer bass wood canvas covered; dark green. 43 inches long. $25. Others up to $65.

Week End Suit Case—Extra depth and width. Of black enameled leather. Big comfortable tray; special leather reinforcements at corners. Two strong leather straps. 24-inch size $7, and all sizes up to 32 inches $9.

Lord & Taylor Suit Case Special—A smart case. 24 inches long. Made of cowhide in brown, russet and black; linen lined. Straps to hold clothing, and special shirt pocket. Very commodious. Corners reinforced to withstand hard wear. This case is specially designed to meet the heavy demand during the summer. Remarkable value at $5.

The Cane Case—The convenience and lightness of the cane case make it unusually popular. This model is very light, even for a cane case, yet exceptionally durable. Corners reinforced with leather; linen lined. Pockets for waists or shirts. 24 inches long $5.

The Oxford Bag—Made on heavy English frame; entirely hand sewed. Sheepskin lined. One extra large and two smaller pockets. Special two-ply veneer bottom holds the original shape of the bag, regardless of rough usage. Made of extra fine cowhide in brown, russet and black: 16, 17 and 18-inch sizes $8.75.

Party Case—Made of long grain morocco in all colors. Fitted with French gilt mirror, memo pad, powder box and bottle for liquids. $5.

Important Special Offers

For this issue of Vogue we have photographed some of the most representative of the smart furniture and fabrics for the summer home, and have made the same special price concessions which we shall offer our New York customers in May.

Reed Furniture. The furniture shown is an exclusive Lord & Taylor design. In the grace of its lines and restraint of its pattern, it shows the taste required in summer furnishings. It is sturdily built to combat the hard service given outdoor furniture. Baronial brown; silver grey; French grey; antique ivory; clear white and natural. Singly it costs—Piping Rock Comfort Chair $16.50; Piping Rock straight chair $16.50; Piping Rock tea table $10, and divan $28.50. The set of four pieces $60. Shipped prepaid to any address.

Cushions for seat and back:—Arm chair or rocker, cretonne $5, tapestry $6.50; side chair cretonne $4, tapestry $5; divan cretonne $10, tapestry, $13.50.

Scotch Art Rug. Made in soft tapestry colorings and reversible: ideally suited for summer. It may be secured in a brown ground with design and border in tapestry blue; or neutral grey with design and border in smart black. 9 x 12 ft. An evident bargain at its new price of $19.50.

Samples of the following fabrics sent on request:—

characteristic, ingenious effects. In it, he offers you the choice of linen ground with lilac, green, blue and red designs with black stripes; also in yellow background. 31 inches wide, in excellent all-linen at $2 a yard.

Fabric B is an effective Futurist design of splendid decorative value. Just imported and can be furnished immediately in many color combinations in English velvet, 31 inches $2.50 a yard; in Printed Linen, 31 inches $1.25 a yard; in Printed Silk, 36 inches $2 a yard.

Fabric C is an imported cretonne absolutely controlled by Lord & Taylor so that the exclusiveness of this pattern may be assured. It is a gorgeous peacock pattern against a ground of black, tan or blue. 50 inches wide, only $2.75 a yard.

Fabric D is an imported French linen in linen ground, with Canterbury bells in tones of orange and foliage in green; also other color combinations. Very striking and quite typical of the prevailing effects in interior decoration. In English Velvet, 31 inches $2.25 a yard; in Printed Linen, 31 inches $1; in Printed Silks, 36 inches $2.

Pillows. The pillow on the right is one of the most admired designs launched by Martine. The yellow ground is striped in black with strong Futurist flower effect. The pillow is of French linen $5. The design may be had by the yard in Printed Linen, 31 inches $2 per yard.

The center pillow is of English Velvet in Fabric D, Canterbury bell design $4.75. It shows the effect of this design in yellow ground with purple flower and green leaves.

The pillow to the left is of English Velvet in Fabric B pattern and is $5.

All of the pillows are of soft floss encased in strong white tickings.

The new Lord & Taylor improvements for the care of your Furs and Draperies.

Dry cold air; vaults locked with time locks. Insurance covered. Before storing, your furs and draperies are cleaned by the new hygienic method—compressed air—in this way avoiding the wear and tear resulting from the constant beating with rattan reeds or machine driven belts. Minor rips are mended and all fur collars cleaned free of charge.

How to make a good vacation better (and save $4.10 in the Bargain)

Fan-tods!

You've had them. They come on the night before vacation. You gather up your things. You bring out your old-style trunk. You start to pack. You jam. You crowd. You squeeze. And still you have to lock up leaving out much you wished to take along.

That's the aggravation which brings on the fan-tods. In this summer of 1914 A. D. it is time you banished them.

The diagram above is conservative. It shows what a regular-size "Likly" Wardrobe Trunk will carry without crowding. Any "Likly" dealer will gladly demonstrate. Yet this trunk is no larger than your old one.

How can it hold so much? Because every square inch is planned out. Our strategy board attends to that.

And the saving! At the trip's end each garment comes out as unwrinkled as when you hung it in.

"Likly" Runabout Wardrobe Trunk

Now for some simple arithmetic. Suppose you took the clothes above in a regular trunk. Without doubt every garment would need pressing at the end of the trip.

Assume the moderate charge of 50c. for each suit, heavy coat, or gown, and 15c. for each skirt or pair of trousers. Leaving out the two raincoats, 6 shirtwaists, and the mackinaw, your pressing bill would be $4.10.

Thus it takes only a few trips for a "Likly" Wardrobe Trunk to save its entire cost.

Do you wonder that we are now called upon to produce over 75 different models of "Likly" Wardrobe Trunks?

Besides the regular size, we produce extra-deep wardrobes, small wardrobes and steamer wardrobes.

All come with our unqualified guarantee covering 5 years.

At the lower left, we show one of the small "Likly" Runabout wardrobes. It is particularly useful for short trips. A brand new model this year.

Has a never-say-die constitution. Our new patented follower holds every garment snugly in place. One press, one click—and your garments are packed or ready to unpack.

Carrying capacity is 3 or 4 suits and a heavy coat or cloak. On the other side are the usual drawers.

Every "Likly" Trunk foundation is of basswood. Strongly reinforced at each slamming point by "Likly" corner caps and angle protectors.

See "Likly" trunks in our catalog and at a nearby dealer's.

"Likly" Wardrobe Trunks are priced from $20.00 to $85.00. Other "Likly" Trunks, $5.25 to $32.00.

Send now for our catalog.

"Likly" Country Club Bag

Here's a bag handsome enough for the idle rich, yet low-priced enough for the man who wonders if he'll ever have to pay an Income Tax.

We call it the "Country Club." We make it of prime-stock imported pigskin. Then we emboss it with a walrus grain. The lock is English and placed out of sight.

Like all "Likly" Hand Luggage, this bag is guaranteed for 5 years.

Prices, 18-inch, $15.00; 20-inch, $16.50.

Comes also in de luxe Carabao stock—a downright brute of a leather for wear. Prices: 18-inch, $25.00; 20-inch, $27.50. Consult your dealer.

"Likly" Virginia Suit Case

Let the Baggage Man heave this suit case about to his heart's content. As they say with a wink in Boston, "The worrying is entirely yours."

Constructed of the stoutest cowhide. Built on imported foundation board. Extra strong handle. Handsome lining and shirt fold.

"Likly" Suit Cases come in an almost endless number of models. All are guaranteed for 5 years. See them at your dealers. Prices $5.00 to $31.50.

This brass trademark is on every piece of "Likly" Luggage. It stands for 70 years of experience in producing the highest grade of luggage—and a five year guarantee.

The "Likly" catalog belongs with your time-tables and other travel information. Contains 128 pages. Describes the most varied line of luggage produced. Send today for a copy.

LUGGAGE

Asks no favors of the baggage man

Mr. Henry Miller looks upon life in his Stamford farmhouse as "The Only Way"

FEW of us are willing to build consistently for future generations, but there are times when we wonder whether rain leaders of copper wouldn't have paid, whether a slate or tile roof might not have been better than one of shingles, or whether a cement or tiled porch might not have saved money in the end. Benjamin A. Howes goes into all these matters in THE ENDURING HOUSE.

Here's a bit of heresy—recognizing the fact that George Washington wasn't much of an architect, though he achieved results that were effective in a broad way if one did not scrutinize the details too closely—THE HOME OF GEORGE WASHINGTON, COUNTRY GENTLEMAN, by Mildred Stapley.

What atrocities have been committed in the name of "Bungalow!" A California architect shows why the type is solving the problem of country living in that part of the country, with pictures of the best ones—CALIFORNIA BUNGALOWS, by Arthur R. Kelly.

Then there are designs for the distinctive furnishing of A CONSISTENT LIVING PORCH, by W. L. Simons.

Working drawings in blueprint form, ready to turn over to the local mason, accompany A FIRE-PLACE TO BURN CORD-WOOD, by Jared Stuyvesant, architect.

If the problem of a conveniently planned garage is troubling you—a garage that will be an architectural success as well—here are the full working drawings (blueprints) in A TWO-CAR GARAGE, by Alfred M. Githens, architect.

The ingenuity of modern design is applied to the arrangement and equipment of the outdoor bedroom in SLEEPING WITH AIR, by Chas. Edw. Hooper.

Some real information for the man about to build is presented in A PERSONALLY-CONDUCTED TOUR IN UTILITY HARDWARE, by Phil M. Riley.

One of the garden accessories—almost a necessity—is made easily obtainable by having a local carpenter use the blueprints with A DESIGN FOR A GARDEN ARBOR WITH SEATS, by Russell Fisher, architect—and blueprint working drawings of A SIMPLE GATEWAY TO A GARDEN WALK, by W. H. Butterfield, architect, are also presented.

A round-up of THE NEW YORK DOG SHOW, by James Watson, a comprehensive summary of PORTABLE POULTRY HOUSES, by F. H. Valentine, an inspiring story of THE PITTSFORD SHETLANDS, by E. L. D. Seymour, and a series of BEFORE AND AFTER PICTURES IN RE-MODELING are splendidly illustrated articles among the many that may not be described for lack of space.

On March 5th the Vogue Educational Service wrote this letter:

"THANK you for your inquiry in regard to choosing a school for your 10-year-old daughter. You say you prefer an Episcopal school. We are giving you two or three schools that are distinctly Episcopal in character."

In our letter we gave the leading particulars about several schools—one in Virginia, one in Massachusetts, and one in Maryland. Our correspondent, a woman in New York, investigated them, and here is the letter she sent us on March 25th:

"For the remainder of the year, at least, I have selected — Hall as the school to which I will send my small daughter at Easter. I wish to thank you for assisting me in selecting it. My sister has visited the school and finds it new, modern and apparently exactly the kind of school we are looking for."

Now is the time for you to plan for next year. On these pages you may find exactly the school you are looking for. If not, write to Vogue, and we will do, without charge, as much special investigation for you as may be necessary. But, in order to render our service most efficiently, tell us as fully and frankly as possible what education the girl or boy has had, what is the object of his education, where you prefer the school to be located, what tuition you care to pay, and any further information that will make our service to you exact and more helpful.

The Result of Fifteen Months' Advertising by a Theatrical Costumer

DOES Vogue advertising pay? Anyone, after a glance at these six pages overflowing with little advertisements, would say "Yes." Here is a letter from one of the 459 advertisers represented in the "Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide"—the oldest, largest, and by far the most profitable classified advertising department in any magazine of quality.

"We started to use Vogue in January, 1913. Since then we have received $3,514 worth of orders from Vogue's readers.

"As you know, this company originally catered to people of the stage exclusively. Now, thanks to Vogue alone, we have enrolled hundreds of private customers—women living everywhere from Hawaii to New York, and from Savannah, Georgia, to Machias, Maine.

"So astonishing have been the results from Vogue that (with the single exception of the new magazine, Vanity Fair) we have dropped all other magazines.

"Though Vogue has brought us so many people not of the stage, you may be interested to hear that both Fanny Ward and Gail Kane told us they first heard of us through our advertisement in the the Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide of Vogue."

BROADWAY THEATRICAL COSTUME CO.,
By Elsie Wunderlich.

What this firm has done through Vogue can be done by any firm that is worthy of the patronage of women of cultivation and discrimination—the sort who alone read Vogue and are interested in the little advertisements of the "Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide."

EXTRAVAGANCE

ANTHONY HOPE defines economy as "doing without something now in the hope that sometime you may want something which you probably won't want at all!"

So much for economy! What is extravagance? Vogue offers this definition: "Extravagance is buying something you don't want and can't use because you do want something which you can't get."

Of this kind of extravagance the "Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide" is the deadly foe. Here, just as in the larger advertisements, you can find at once exactly what you are looking for.

"Needles and Pins,
Needles and Pins!
When a Man's Married
His Trouble Begins."

POSSIBLY this little lyric which has come to us through the ages was meant to represent the many little things that were necessary in those days and are trebly necessary now.

Possibly the devoted husband had not only to supply the funds, but even to do the marketing. In any event, he or his spouse certainly went from shop to shop in an endless chase for the best bargains.

The "Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide," like the telegraph, has annihilated distance. Look through these pages and you can calculate how many footsteps, and how many hours, are saved by having all these scores of unusual shops gathered together in this highly convenient form for your inspection.

But do not be satisfied merely with looking. Write!

A Social Register of Shops

BEGIN on page a with "Antiques" and read through to "Unusual Gifts" on page f.

The effect is precisely that of reading a Social Register of shops. But, fortunately, the larger size of these pages gives enough space for each shop to tell you just a little about itself. The name, the address, ten words of description—that is all. But it is quite enough for the Vogue reader who needs only the suggestion to look further.

Behind each of these little advertisements is a shop of decided personality. Each of them is an institution. Each wants to know you.

THE DOG OR PUPPY that you want is waiting for you at our Kennels. All breeds. Prices right. Ask for catalogue. Black Short Haired Cattery, Oradell, N. J.

To Intending Advertisers

MANY debutantes in the "Shoppers' & Buyers' Guide" are a little surprised to learn that it requires a month and five days to publish their advertisements.

The production of a magazine like Vogue, however, is a careful—even a deliberate—process; and we cannot engage to print even a four-line advertisement that is received later than a month and five days before the date of the issue for which it is intended.

The next available Vogue is the issue dated June 15th. Monday, May 11th, is the last day for receiving advertisements scheduled to begin with this issue. Please address:

The SPOTSWOOD

Bright Finish

This design, thoroughly Georgian in character, is strongly influenced by the refinement of the Southern type of Colonial decoration.

There is a pronounced dignity in its simple and severe lines, relieved as they are by the mantle and shield decoration.

The fluting, a new treatment for flatware, is delicate and does not interfere with the graceful effect of the outline, and serves to modify the plain surface.

The SPOTSWOOD is particularly suited to Colonial and Georgian dining-rooms, yet being in such exquisite taste, it looks well in any surroundings.

It is furnished in knives, forks, spoons and fancy individual and serving pieces. For sale by leading jewelers everywhere and

BRIDE'S NUMBER

Dated May 15

WHEN you depart for seashore or mountains, be sure that Vogue goes with you. If you are spending the summer in Newport or Bar Harbor or wherever society is, of course you will need your Vogue. If, on the other hand, you will be in some quiet nook far from the world, Vogue is exactly the connecting link you will most want to retain.

Unlike letters, magazines are not forwarded by the post office. Therefore, to make sure of Vogue this summer, please be sure to give us three weeks to change our records from your old to your new address. There are hundreds, even thousands, of addresses to be changed this month; that is why Vogue has to have at least three weeks' advance notice to insure accuracy.

THE NEW PRIZE CONTEST

Semifinal notice of the close of Vogue's current contest is given on page 154. The final notice will be in the next Vogue, and the contest closes on June 10. If you have not yet begun your letter, we suggest that you do it at once.

What Vogue wants is a record of your actual experiences with its various services. Please read the notice carefully before writing.

VOGUE TAKES NO HOLIDAY

Although many of the best shops open summer branches in such places as Newport, it is not by any means always possible to buy just what you want in the hot weather. When you find yourself far from the shops, think first of the Vogue Shopping Service. Hundreds of women who are in or near the metropolis during the remainder of the year are enthusiastic patrons of the Shopping Service during the summer. The convenience of having your purchasing done without charge by experts in the hot weather needs hardly to be mentioned. See page 113 for suggestions as to the most convenient manner of using this all-the-year service of Vogue at the particular season when shopping unassisted is extraordinarily difficult.

VOGUE'S SUMMER NUMBERS

On page 16 there is a very brief forecast of the contents of the next three numbers of Vogue; while in the column opposite the next Vogue is announced in more detail. Even at the risk of seeming overinsistent let us once more remind you, if you are a subscriber to Vogue, to give us at least three weeks' warning before Vogue is to be sent to your summer home. Merely to notify the local post office will not suffice, since magazines, unlike letters, are not forwarded until extra postage has been supplied by you for the purpose.

LATE spring fashions and all kinds of news for the bride-to-be, the bridegroom-to-be, their families, their friends—this is the delightful subject of the next Vogue. For its cover we have selected this appropriate design:

The cover of the next Vogue is by
G. W. Plank

This has been, in and around New York, a season of many engagements and consequently of many weddings. In the Brides' Number we shall tell in great detail about all the new ideas for wedding gowns, jewelry, bridesmaids' gowns, and wedding presents. The most important detail of a bride's toilette, the veil, which is so often unbecomingly arranged, will be shown in a number of very charming pictures specially posed for this issue of Vogue. Although the wedding service itself has remained without much change for generations, every season brings new things for the edification of the bridal party and the guests.

The selection of the trousseau is almost as interesting to the world at large as to the bride herself. Vogue will go into it with greater detail this year than previously; and will have also much good advice on the selection of the linen outfit and other necessities for the new home.

"PLACE AUX HOMMES"

Of interest to the husband-to-be is an article in the next Vogue on the groom's clothes and his general duties at the wedding, with a discussion of the things to be done by best man and ushers. There will in addition be many suggestions for gifts to the ushers—these, of course, are equally suitable as gifts for other occasions, for instance, birthdays.

To read the next Vogue is to be thoroughly informed of the latest developments in the spring mode—that is why we know this Brides' Number will be of particular interest to all readers.

DECORATION through the EYES of a DECORATOR

THE home of Mr. Ogden Armour at Lake Forest, near Chicago, has been called the most beautiful house between New York and San Francisco. It was designed by Arthur Huen of Chicago in the style of the Italian Renaissance. Mrs. Armour herself had much to do with the planning of the house and of its gardens, and the working out of the problems of the interior decoration. The result obtained by this co-operation is a home of exceptionally well-balanced arrangement. The great building fits serenely into the landscape and belongs there like the English country house which always seems to have sprung from the beloved soil upon which it stands.

So carefully considered were the furnishings that now, after several years of occupancy, the great rooms are still uncluttered. The first impression which one receives is that of spaciousness, and secondly a definite and pleasant impression of color. Here are no dark rooms hung with musty tapestries; a flood of sunshine is a part of the decorative plan, and cool spaces of marble or paint receive and return the flood of light without losing in quality.

The house is built around a hall one hundred and fifty feet long, from which there opens to the south the living-room, the sun room, and the dining-room. On the other side are the vestibule, the reception-rooms, a great ball-room, the decoration of which is yet to be completed, and various other rooms. At one end of the hall is the stairway, which, in arrangement, suggests that of the Louvre, though there the stairway opens up more imposingly as the greater height of the ceilings gives it greater importance. At the other end a corridor leads to a large gallery.

The flood of light which is part of the decorative scheme reaches even the great central hall, bringing out the rich texture of the hanging tapestries and brightening to a warm tan the rugs which repeat in deeper tone the color of Caen stone walls

Because of its size and the great richness of its walls of beautifully veined, mauve marble with their inset paintings in grisaille, the dining-room is an ideal setting for the regal furniture of the period of Louis the Fourteenth

The very wide stripe of the hangings gives an air of restfulness and dignity to the great four-post bed, crowned by a fine, carved tester, which dominates the rich but severely plain furnishings of Mr. Armour's sleeping room

The music room, lightly and charmingly paneled, offers perfect comfort in the midst of careful beauty, and affords the wide spaces and long vistas that add to the charm of all that is sung or played

In the vestibule and the hall the walls are of Caen stone, and the ceilings are of plaster-work in the modern French manner. On the vestibule floor is an unusual Chinese rug of oval form, blue and gold in color. Tall standards of Italian ironwork hold electric lights on either side of the door. Against the walls are seats with coverings of old Savonnerie weave which came from the famous Doucet sale.

The long hall has the splendid dignity of a great museum gallery, but it has a freedom from cluttering that few galleries can maintain. At intervals, tapestries are hung against the Caen stone walls. Old French and Italian console-tables are placed against the tapestries, and there is an occasional long bench covered with old needlework. Each piece of furniture used in the hall has a definite decorative importance, and each object is so placed that the setting emphasizes its beauty. The long rugs which cover the marble floor are only slightly darker than the Caen stone of the walls, and they have plain colored centers with borders of a conventionalized chrysanthemum design.

THE DECORATOR APPROVES

From a decorator's point of view the dining-room is the finest room in the house. The walls are of mauve marble, beautifully marked, and inset in the marble are some of Huet's decorative paintings in grisaille which combine admirably with the mauve of the marble and the crimson of the damask hangings. Since the walls are the decorative feature of this room, the ceiling is treated with less elaboration than are the other ceilings, and has a restful effect excellent in combination with the walls of variegated marble. The moldings of the windows are well planned, and in good scale with the rest of the room. The huge rug is an expanse of deep tan, with a border design in crimson. In this room, the furniture is of the period of Louis XIV, a style admirably adapted to a large dining-room such as this. The long console-table with carved cabriole legs is unusually beautiful in proportion and design.

The charming reception room on the ground floor opens from the vestibule. This room is done in salmon, green, and mauve, a color scheme derived from the brocade that covers

By the middle of its rug, the bedroom of Mrs. Armour sanctions the use of black in decoration, but the black is enlivened by a rose border on the rug, by furniture coverings of rose taffeta and rose-printed linen, and by walls of cream white paneling the walls. There is a Savonnerie rug of harmonious color on the floor, and much of the furniture is in green lacquer.

The decoration of the music room is restrained. The paneling is French, excellent in proportion and simple in decoration, and the ceiling to which it leads the eye is highly decorative as befits the ceiling of a paneled room.

Opening from the south side of the hall, between the living-room and the dining-room, is the trellis room, which, in turn, opens upon a terrace leading to a pool. At the terrace doors there are quaint, squat Chinese figures in stone, all holding pots of flowers in their arms; these interesting figures came from an old Italian garden. At one end of the garden room is an

A garden-room lined with green trellises and filled with flowers and young plants forms an admirable transition from the house within to the garden without eighteenth century wall fountain banked with green, growing things. Ivy has been trained against the trellis-work about the fountain; and plants and flowers of many kinds help to create the atmosphere of a garden in the house. Much of the furniture in this room is old French, and many gay fabrics are used for the coverings—notably a Jouy linen printed with a small design of pink roses. The rugs, woven for the room, are in green, black, and rose color.

The living-room, which opens from both hall and garden-room, is large and irregular. It departs from the French style used so extensively throughout the house, and is strictly English in its architectural detail. It is paneled to the cornice in walnut, and the paneling is enriched by long lines of carving in the manner of Grinling Gibbons. There are bookshelves very effectively placed, so that the books are flush with the paneling, and screened by a lattice-work of gilt wires.

Like all the other first-floor rooms, the living-room has a modeled plaster ceiling, but whereas the vestibule and hall ceilings have the lightness of modern French design, and the garden-room the delicate grace of the period of Adam, the living-room has a heavy, English ceiling in accord with its English paneling of dark walnut. The carpet in this room is very fine Savonnerie, and there are many old chairs covered with Genoese velvet. The room has been planned for comfort and enjoyment and is a most human place with its array of books, magazines, flowers, and chairs intimately placed.

THE PLEASANT SLEEPING-ROOMS

On the second floor are many bedrooms and boudoirs. In Mrs. Armour's bedroom, the walls and woodwork are painted cream color; the curtains are of rose; and the carpet is black with a rose border. The bed is a remarkably fine old one, with all the width and comfort of the old-time bed. There are many comfortable chairs, a chaise longue, and a screen, all covered with a rose and cream, printed linen. Rose taffeta covers the bed and the lit de repos. Small cabinets of glass hold Mrs. Armour's delightful collection of white porcelain faience. Opening from this room is the boudoir, which has walls covered with a beautiful and really old figured damask in green and rose. The mantel is pink marble set with bas-reliefs.

Besides the family bedrooms, there are a number of guest rooms on the second floor. One of these takes its decorative inspiration from the Chinese, and is furnished in green and yellow lacquer, with wall covering of chintz in Chinese design. The walls of another guest room are covered with an old French chintz, called "Génie de la Paix," which seems an apt name for a bedroom chintz. There is also a gray and rose guest room that is quite lovely. The furniture is painted in gray and rose, and the gray walls of severely simple paneling are broken only by two or three pictures and an occasional mirror set into the paneling. The antique tent bed is hung with gray striped silk, and gray and rose brocade covers the chairs.

A little shell pink taffeta and a little less "craquelé" lace are combined in a gown which demonstrates what great differences may be made with what slight changes. The skirt lifted a few inches becomes an overskirt, the sash dropped a foot or two suggests a tunic, gathers repeated twice create a yoke, and a three-inch ruffle smartly flaring at the belt does nicely for the lower bodice Premet granting the vest a new importance uses one of book muslin less to fill in than to be framed by a sharply contrasting bodice of blue serge and gay stripes. The drapery of the skirt lifts it well above the ground and, pertly pointed on either hip, crosses the front as flatly as a yoke. At the back a broad, stiff bow decreases the effect of width somewhat gradually

Watermelon pink is its color, taffeta its stuff, frills its very life, and sauciness its disposition. Jauntily lifted in the back over a chiffon drop edged by accordion plaited taffeta, the gown suggests a cock a-tiptoe, crowing merrily, and to continue the impression, a cock's comb of frills runs up the back to meet a girdle of Nattier blue velvet. Farquharson and Wheelock models

VARY AS IT WILL, CRISP AND SPRIGHTLY IT MUST BE

Designed by Mme. Paquin for Mme. Joire, this suit of striped black and white wool conservatively maintains the straight silhouette at front and back, yet conceals a radical ripple to give freedom for walk or dance. The method of obtaining this innovation is a cleverly cut back and side section circular at the bottom. The stripes in their possibilities of variation from the perpendicular to the horizontal supply all the ornament that is needed, though a touch of color is made possible by the broad collar—Paquin's favorite—of gray-blue cloth trimmed with metal buttons. The hat—all there is of it—is of red and blue changeable silk and bears velvet flowers of the same colors

A hint of the Indian in fringes and feathered head-dress, of the orient in the broad half girdle, a great deal of Paris in the very little sleeve and back—and yet the whole nothing but Paquin. Black net over white caps the shoulder and falls into a puff held by jet. A sash of Alice blue lies below one of black satin, and is carried up to form what bodice back there is. Satin skirt and charmeuse petticoat are slashed irregularly. Mme. Joire, the sister-in-law of Mme. Paquin, came recently to America to exhibit the Paquin spring collection. These two costumes, in which Mme. Joire posed for Vogue, were designed for her by Mme. Paquin, and were not shown in the exhibition

IN HIGH CUT SUIT OR LOW CUT GOWN A
PAQUIN PARISIENNE OUT-PARISES PARIS

Not to insist upon its dominance, the overskirt of this Jenny model appears in wraith-like silk net in the misty color of sea-blue. In front, it falls to the ground, but in the back it is lifted in a cascade and held by a butterfly bow of Pompeian plaid silk in tones of yellow and the sea-blue of the plain taffeta skirt. These stripes gleam again in the tunic, and their colors reappear in the crown of the black straw hat, wreathed in wheat of a greenish blue

After winding it twice around the skirt, Premet drops a band of blue charmeuse in stole-like ends to below the knees, and creates with it definite lines to contrast with the loose puffs of blue chiffon over the dark blue charmeuse underdress. Embroidered figures in brown give character to the filmy chiffon. In and out of the irregularities of a black straw hat a wreath of tiny roses fits itself adroitly. Gowns from Caroline Austin, hats from Weiss

In this Rondeau model the lace bodice of the white taffeta gown gives the effect of a bolero and apparently happens accidentally to shield the arm. Taffeta binds the silk net tunics and golden taffeta forms the girdle. With the front view of this costume is shown a hat of black straw with a crown of net; with the back view, one of leghorn with circular sections of silk net and frills upon one side, balanced by tiny flowers upon the opposite side

GOWNS FOR THE SUMMER DAYS IN WHICH AIRY TRANSPARENCY HAS TRIUMPHED COMPLETELY IN THE BODICE, AND INVADES TO LESS OR GREATER LENGTH THE DRAPERIES OF THE SKIRT

Designed by Robert Mallet-Stevens, this unique hall-way with white walls, red wood-work, and a carpet simulating red and white tiles, attracted interest at the Paris Salon, and was by Mme. Paquin adopted to give the first impression of her home at Deauville

A wholly novel scheme is worked out to an absolutely consistent conclusion in this delightful dining-room designed by Paul Follot, shown at the autumn Salon, and carried out in a house at Neuilly under the personal supervision of the artist

TO LIVE IN A PICTURE GALLERY WAS EVER A DIFFICULT FEAT, BUT THESE HOMES AT NEUILLY AND DEAUVILLE PRESENT A STRONG ARGUMENT IN FAVOR OF LIVING IN ROOMS FROM SALON EXHIBITIONS

When many designers are being beguiled by all manner of feminine furbelows and frippery, Calot resists temptation. She restricts the ornament of the bodice of a blue taffeta frock to a simple batiste underbodice which, rolling back at neck and wrist, gives crisp white collar and cuffs. At the same time she indulges the skirt in a three-tiered elaboration in which she follows the mode according to a method of her own. A wide, draped sash gives at the front the new yoke effect, and the shirring of the lower tunic ruffle gives the tightness—since tightness must be—at the knees

She might demand a little more bustle, she might desire a little less sash, but otherwise a belle of 1880 would feel quite sure it was for her Premet had made this jaunty polonaise of blue moire taffeta. In it the dart and seam, long evaded and forgotten, are again boldly used to limn a new silhouette, and rows of black, silk-covered buttons are set close together in lines of unequivocal preciseness. And then, perhaps to break the spell of a bygone day, Japanese embroidery is woven into the sash

A cat may look at a king and an apron give a Premet a suggestion. Apparently as humbly graceful a thing it was which caused him to set black net ruffles in a low oval in front and in a shorter oval in the back, upon a gown of black taffeta. The skirt shows gathers, but the waist is vouchsafed no fulness, and the sleeves are abbreviated as well as restricted to the new skin-tightness. But as if to compensate somewhat for this lack of ornament upon the bodice, the girdle is elaborated about its upper edge with pink flowers and a blue moire band

THE PERPENDICULAR LINES OF A PREMETS POLONAISE APPEAR THE MORE QUAINLY PERPENDICULAR AMONG MODERN DRAPERIES, THE OVAL OF A RUFFLED APRON AND THE FLARE OF A SHIRRED TUNIC

Denuded of its flue and known as "burnt ostrich," the familiar ostrich feather masquerades as the unpermitted aigrette with a skill which might almost deceive an American customs inspector. A diminutive black, Milan straw sailor which atones for limitation of brim by abundance of crown, holds the feather upright at the back

As far from its type as are the present frivolities of the tailored suit are the whims of the sailor hat. Its brim of whilom stiffness is become a thing of gracious curves; its tight, plain grosgrain band is here a lightly folded, black moire ribbon; and a highly decorative burnt ostrich feather prolongs the curve of the black straw brim

An all-white straw hat rolls sharply up in front, where it is held by a dashing bow of white moire ribbon which passes through the brim, running up to a point at the left and down to two points at the right

Gowns of summer fabrics or of spring silks are appropriate for wear with this little black hat trimmed with pink roses set in green foliage, and given character by a rosette-like bow of Alice blue, faille ribbon at the back. The hats shown on this page are from Hollander

To make the small hat appear yet smaller than it is the modiste gives it a transparent brim of black horsehair braid so delicate as to suggest black net frilling, and forms the crown of a half dozen pink roses with a few bits of foliage on a suggestion of a background

IN THAT REALM OF ILLUSION, MILLINERY, HONESTY IS NO POLICY

AT ALL, AND TO SEEM IS FAR MORE IMPORTANT THAN TO BE

A snip of the scissors, a turn of the wrist, and full tunic and tight lace petticoat become voluminous eastern trousers below which peeps a diaphanous version of the pantalet of 1840. A bodice embroidered in silver and a sable girdle complete this costume of rose taffeta

In recent seasons, many a Paris couturier has drawn a straight line from shoulder to hip. Chéruit dares one step farther, and on the gown of black and white silk at the top of this page, brings the material out in decided, triangular puffs exactly at the waist-line

A demure gown distinguished by complete absence of ornament is that at the upper right corner of the page. Made of white shantung, with white satin revers and underbodice, this gown varies the usual Chéruit line in the draping of the three-quarter tunic

Shall the skirt be full and flaring? "By all means," says Fashion. "Ah, at last freedom of movement," cries her manikin, Everywoman. "Not at all," replies Fashion, and below flaring tunic and yet more flaring ruffle she places the narrowest of underskirts as let and hindrance to the feet

At last fashion responds to the natural expectation of the world that pantalets should come in pairs, but, faithful to her faithlessness, she places them one over the other instead of side by side

LONDON is the city of fogs, Chicago of winds, New York of weathers—but Paris is the city of sunshine. Paris lives to be merry, to see, to comment, and to laugh, or, perhaps even more eagerly, to be seen and—a little laughed at, if so it happens. Her life is lived fearlessly upon the boulevards, the long lanes and broad verandahed restaurants of her parks, and the pesage of the racecourse.

Try to think Paris without a sparkle on white arches and gilded domes; one can't. When it rains Paris simply is not Paris, and all this spring it has rained and thereby prolonged the Lenten season of penance for Parisiennes by keeping them out of town. At mi-carême the confetti throwers carried dripping umbrellas and were finally put to flight by a cloudburst of such volume that the reporters of the French dailies were inspired to call it a "fête nautique."

There are, in fact, still so few people in town that it is next to impossible to find a sufficient number of congenial souls for a small dinner party or even a game of bridge. The President of the French Republic and Madame Poincaré are basking in the sunshine at Èze. Ambassador Myron T. Herrick and Mrs. Herrick are at Cannes, and the American colony in Monte Carlo has claimed the Duchess de La Rochefoucauld, Mrs. Rutherford-Stuyvesant, Mr. James Hazen Hyde and Mrs. Hyde, and Mr. Anthony Drexel. Those few smart women who have been in Paris during April have been bent upon other things than social festivities.

MISS WILLARD GOES A-TROUSSEAUING

Mrs. Willard, wife of the American Ambassador to Spain, and Miss Willard were here recently for a bit of "trousseau-shopping" before going back to Madrid. Miss Willard, whose wedding to Kermit Roosevelt will be one of the social events of the coming season, had just returned from London where she was presented at Court.

Miss Willard's wedding-dress of white satin under point d'Angleterre lace has been designed by Lucile with rather straight lines. One of its most charming features is the court train which is more than four yards long, hangs from the shoulders, and is caught lightly at the hips. It is charmingly lined with lace scattered with bouquets of orange blossoms which show prettily when the train is carried. The veil is of tulle and fits like a cap over the head, with a wreath of orange blossoms at the back. Across the front a broad lace frill hangs just low enough to veil the eyes—Lucile's latest device for increasing the mystery and demureness in a bride.

Miss Willard's sister, who is to be the maid of honor, will wear pale blue, and the dresses of the bridesmaids will be of white tulle. On her way to Spain, Miss Margaret Andrews, one of the bridesmaids, has been spending some little time in Paris preparing for the wedding and the various festivities connected with it. For Mrs. Willard a very beautiful gown of black Chantilly lace over white satin has been made.

SUGAR-COATED GAIETIES

Since amusements are few just now in Paris, the desire of the moment is to sugar-coat all that here are, and to give a social flavor to every kind of function. Before the dress rehearsal of "Aphrodite," for instance, Mme. Cora de Laparcerie, for whom the play was written, and her husband, Jacques Richepin, gave a tea in the foyer of the Théâtre de la Renaissance, and afterward the guests were permitted to view the statue of the goddess Aphrodite by Rodin, which appears in the play.

THE LEADING LADY RECEIVES

Newspaper correspondents, art critics, and many men of letters responded to the invitation, and during the tea the foyer, which probably never before had seen a tea party, took on quite a family air. Mme. de Laparcerie looked particularly charming in a gown of white mousseline-de-soie combined with perruche, the parrot green which is so much à la mode this season. She carried a huge bunch of Parma violets. To add to the intimacy of the affair the two young sons of M. and Mme. Richepin were permitted to attend the tea. They are growing boys about ten and twelve years of age, and in their strong Richepin traits there is no difficulty in tracing their relationship to their illustrious grandfather, Jean Richepin, the celebrated poet and member of the Academy.

Once upon a time it would have been called a gir-dle, another time a tunic, but now it is an over-skirt which, buttoning down the back, holds in the fulness of a second fuller overskirt

The statue of Aphrodite was, of course, a sensation. It is quite a new idea, this of placing some artist's work in the lime-light of the stage, but it is in keeping with the French trait of doing nothing by halves. If a play demand that an actor partake of food and drink, real food and good red wine are placed before him. I never felt more keenly the pangs of hunger than when I saw Lucien Guitry dispose of a course dinner including a generous beefsteak. Frondaie's play called for a statue of Aphrodite, and none but Rodin's masterpiece would do. In a recent play at the Marigny theatre there was a scene which showed the Salon, and faithful copies of some of last year's exhibits appeared on the stage. Among them the group which is photographed at the end of this article, by Cecil Howard, a young American sculptor who was made a member of the Salon at an extremely early age, was displayed very prominently.

"CHERCHEZ LA FEMME"

Apropos of "Aphrodite," an exquisitely humorous incident was associated with the première, for the very French comedy of a duel preceded it. The duel was fought, of course, between the author, M. Pierre Frondaie and M. Jacques Richepin, husband of Mme. de Laparcerie—une rencontre bien Parisienne.

The very-much-talked-of writer of the new play is a married man, and his wife happened to feel a little bitterness toward Mme. de Laparcerie, who returned it cordially. Each indulged in the pastime of a very frank expression of opinion. In any other country, it might have ended there. But the bold M. Richepin demanded of the equally intrepid M. Frondaie that he apologize in his wife's place (since she would not do so), knowing, of course, that that young man must, in the nature of things, refuse. How could a French playwright apologize to anybody for anything upon the eve of the production of his piece? He would have been hissed by his audience had he done so, and on the other hand everybody was much pleased when he accepted the challenge.

THE CONCLUDING COMPLIMENTS

It was certain all along that no very great harm would be done—as none was—and equally certain that M. Richepin would present his compliments to M. Frondaie upon the night of the dress rehearsal, since otherwise his wife,

Mme. de Laparcerie, might feel a bit awkward in her rôle of Chrysis. On the evening of the première the house was packed to suffocation and there was if anything more than the customary applause.

It is quite impossible for the outlander to comprehend the psychology of an affair such as this. Who but a Frenchman could take so light a thing so seriously? The mistake foreigners make is in believing that the combatants, or any one else concerned, go about these matters heavily, in the ponderous way affected by the Germans. The very essence of the affair is a mixture of temper and a sort of superficial pluck. The deeper sort of courage is not absent from the French character, but it seems to be held in reserve for other occasions, and is not called forth for such differences as are fought out on the piste sablée of the establishments Chéri-Halbronn, at Neuilly.

The three hundred Poiret costumes which appeared on the stage at "Aphrodite" added much to the spectacular effect of the performance and were in strong contrast to the gowns in the audience, which, almost without exception, were white. In the shadow of the unlighted baignoires where one often sees celebrities of the day and frocks far prettier than those in the brilliantly lighted salle—that is, if one is fortunate enough to catch a glimpse of them—sat many notables. Occupants of the baignoires always arrive late and stay only until the middle of the last act. They never leave their baignoires and frequently are partially screened from the orchestra by a grille.

"OUR MONNA DELZA"

In the dusk of one of the baignoires I caught sight of Monna Delza in a very becoming frock of white chiffon, cut to a deep V in both the front and the back. She wore a long necklace

"If I permit you to be slashed at all," said Madame Paquin to Mlle. Ariette Dorgère's sprigged taffeta frock, "I insist upon my pet circular flounce to conceal the fact" of very large pearls, and a magnificent diamond suspended from a band of black velvet a quarter of an inch wide, which was drawn tight under her chin. With her evening frock and magnificent jewels, she wore a tiny black hat of glazed straw, which was almost without trimming and very severe in outline. Oddly enough, it did not look out of place.

IN FULNESS OF MATERIAL IS NOT COMFORT

A young woman who occupied the baignoire just back of me wore the charming frock of gleaming white taffeta illustrated on the first page of this article. The bodice was sleeveless, had no shoulder straps, and was drawn tightly about the figure in crosswise folds and fastened in the middle of the back where it was shirred and boned. The very full, knee-length tunic was of taffeta, stiffened by a wide band of white panne satin, which was set a few inches above the edge of it. The underskirt consisted of two tight bands, one of open Bohemian lace above one of white chiffon, in the effect of the so-called pantalet skirt.

The companion of this young woman wore the frock sketched on the second page. It was of lustrous satin-finished taffeta, in that most exquisite of shades known as mother-of-pearl. A short overskirt of the taffeta was tightly draped about the hips and fastened in the back with a row of ball-shaped, mother-of-pearl buttons. Below it was a full flounce of filmy, écreu colored craquelé lace, which reached almost to the bottom of the skirt. The bodice of taffeta and lace was held in place by shoulder straps of strings of pearls.

THE TEMPERAMENTAL COIFFURE

The hair of the woman who wore this costume was dressed decidedly high with a rather straight profile line from the nape of the neck to the crown of the head, and there was a noticeable absence of wave. In several other conspicuously smart coiffures the hair was not waved at all, nor was it fluffy. It was drawn close to the head above the ears with only the soft undulation possessed by all hair that is well brushed, and was piled rather high on the head in a loose puff with no ornaments and no pins visible. The sketch in the upper left corner of page 36 gives an idea of the effect. This style is much more mature and sophisticated than the demure, close coiffure we have been wearing, but each style has its own charm.

THE GOWNS OF A PLAY

The new farce at the Variétés has been pronounced a success—but did the Variétés ever produce a failure? The present play, "La Tante d'Honfleur," presents several stage favorites and keeps the audience convulsed to the end of the last act. Mlle. Eve Lavallière wears in it some very becoming frocks, and Mlle. Arlette Dorgère wore the Paquin model of white silk sprigged in red which is sketched on page 36. It shows the circular flare below the knee and the frills completely conceal the openings on either side. It is typical of Paquin's new models.

The Société des Steeplechases has organized a special race meet to take place at Auteuil during the visit this spring of King George about twelve inches below the tunic-blouse of serge, which was loosely confined just below the waist-line by a narrow belt of blue suède run through mother-of-pearl slides. Beneath it an overskirt of a band of serge pressed in very fine plaits, and a deeper flounce of the serge, knife-plaited, fell below the knees. The tight sleeves were cuffed in serge and had frills of white batiste. The wearer of this frock drew her fur tightly about her neck and shivered in the icy wind, although she stood close to a glowing brazier.

BERNARD CREATES A GIRDLE

A Bernard costume which was worn the same day is sketched in the lower right corner on this page. It, also, showed a surprisingly high-corseted effect and a very new line in the girdle, which was placed at the normal waist-line and drawn lower directly in the middle of the front, just suggesting the

How a tangoist tangoed one single solitary tango in this frock no man knows, but she did—and exceedingly well, forsooth—at the Palais Persan and Queen Mary. By a happy coincidence the race takes place on St. George's day, and so the military steeplechase is to be called the "Prix de St. George" and all of the other races are to receive appropriate names, such as "Crown," "Sandringham," and "Windsor."

THOUGH PETTICOATS ARE TIGHT THEY ARE SHORT

Thus far this season all of the race meets have been marred by rain, and many a pretty hat and frock have come to grief. The new full, short skirts, giving much the silhouette of the Dutch peasant, have appeared in great numbers. To be sure, they are always worn with narrow underskirts, but the underskirt scarcely shows at all. Madame Lanvin wears a costume of blue serge with a full overskirt over a narrow underskirt which clears the ground by five inches.

which is sketched at the left on page 37. It was of crow blue serge so fine that six paces away it looked like voile, and it was combined with black satin. The flaring overskirt of blue serge almost hid the black satin underskirt. The semi-fitted waist, which extended to the hips, was of serge and satin. The satin fronts were shirred into the underarm seams and draped in crosswise folds. Closely set jet buttons fastened the bodice down the front and there was a Gladstone collar of white silk faille. The sleeves were of blue serge cuffed with white faille, and the four-inch straight sash of serge was lined with satin and loosely tied in front.

THE HIGH CORSET FROM CHÉRUIT

Another frock which was conspicuous at this same event is illustrated at the right of page 37. It showed a new high line in corseting and had many of the earmarks of Chéruit's models. The underskirt was very narrow and extended

"The high-corseted effect? Of course," shrugs Bernard without the quiver of an eyelash, "and something new in girdles. Here is one slightly low in the front"

Withdrawing from the front of the skirt in favor of sash-ends, the overskirt of this black taffeta gown gathers itself together for a flare in the back that flaunts itself conspicuously when Madam stands still, and when she dances, waves and billows like a silky sea. From gathers beneath the arm, the basque is buttoned with new snugness about the newly high-corseted figure; the sleeve, too, in spite of gathers in the seam, is "skin" tight

To give countenance to the skirt, the Niniche hat with its black paradise flares with an equal sprightliness and assurance

A gown without a gather!—in bodice, sleeves, or skirt. The overskirt finds a new way to flare by being cut in a circular piece and box-plaited. The entire costume is of dark blue broadcloth with a mother-of-pearl ornament at the belt and, save for meager frills of lace, there is not so much as a curve in skirt or bodice to detract from the flow of the tunic. The slit but serves to increase the realism of what is called the pantalet skirt

Even in the gray satin that covers the hat, there is no fulness; and the bunch of violets at the back is as snug as possible

Granted no plaits and scant flare, an overskirt of black faille attracts its full share of attention by thick-set stripes of red and yellow; and that the blue serge of the suit proper may not be restricted to too limited a province, a broad sash and bow of it fall low from front to back across the silk. The two rows of buttons, one on either side, that are conceded to the jacket, are made as little obvious as possible by a covering of the dark blue serge

The hat takes its note from the skirt and is of red satin even to the feathers, to which fronds of paradise give a touch of nature

A Short Season and a Merry One—"Titlemen" Whose Titles Do Not Insure Them to Be Gentlemen, and Impostors Who Pose as Princes of the Houses of Foreigners

HAIL to the suburban sports season—a short and a merry one! How refreshing it is to be out in the open after a feverish winter of dances and pageants and reforms. The Long Island program is most attractive, too, this year. Piping Rock, the ideal playground, has scheduled diverse amusements; at Cedarhurst the first meet of the amateur and gentlemen's races is soon to occur; even Belmont Park promises sport, and Meadow Brook is ready for polo.

THE ANGLO-INDIAN SPORT

Lord Wimborne may come over with the international polo team which will play the first of its series of games on June 9. However, we shall have much polo before that time—at Devon, at Piping Rock, at Bryn Mawr, and at Great Neck. Many of our crack players, not necessarily the great stars, but sportsmen of whom we are justly proud, have been in England for the hunting season this winter. Lord Wimborne, who was until this winter Lord Ashby St. Ledgers, has been a frequent visitor to New York, and he was, if I remember rightly, best man at the wedding of his cousin, the Duke of Marlborough, to Miss Consuelo Vanderbilt, at which time he was known to us as Hon. Ivor Churchill Guest. I doubt whether Lady Wimborne comes over now even if her husband does decide to play his spring polo in America. She is a charming Englishwoman, a daughter of Lord Ebury.

Some one has said that polo is essentially a pastime in which those with restricted pocket-books have no place, and it is true that this English game does not seem to appeal to the masses as does baseball, nor has it the attraction for the primitive mind which is so evident a quality of the racecourse. However, polo is intensely exciting and thrilling to the initiated, and last summer it was proved that other people besides those who were in society took some interest in the matches. Also, the international match left us all drunk with victory; and well it might, for polo is an essentially English, or rather Anglo-Indian sport. In my father's day polo was, at least in America, a most restricted amusement. It used to be played, as I remember it when a lad, on the grounds of the old Country Club at Westchester. I have a dim, indistinct recollection that the round, red, monkey-like caps which the men wore then, and which fashion afterwards appropriated as head-gear for women, were especially fascinating.

QUESTIONABLE "TITLEMEN"

There are rumors that Newport will have more foreign visitors this year than in former seasons, and this brings up the question of whether we are careful enough as to whom we admit into society. Is it sufficient that a man's name has appeared in one of the numerous books of social reference—in the Peerage or in the Landed Gentry—in the various annuals of the different Continental countries, or even in the pages of the sacred Almanach de Gotha? Are we not allowing America to become a clearing-house for decayed and degenerate nobility? When a son is a black sheep, is he not sent to the "States" in search of the inevitable American heiress? We are more fortified against England than against other nations in this matter, as we can find out about people there more easily, and there are not such large families as in the Latin and Teutonic countries. An Italian or Spanish grandee with a long line of ancestors and a princely title may be, for all that, a detrimental, and there are so many sons and daughters of Italy and Spain and Austria that to index them all, not alone by their titles, but according to their good and bad qualities as well, is almost impossible. To be au courant with all the latest developments of all the scandals of all the foreign families is an impossibility to the average hostess.

RUSSIAN PRINCES AND ITALIAN COUNTS

So far, Russo-American alliances have been few, probably because there are so many Russian princes that the title means little. As for Italian counts, they are so prevalent that the title seldom calls to mind an individual; it means merely a species. Of course, some of these young "titlemen" are very worthy. In fact, I know of over a score or more of men of excellent family—titled, noble, and even princely—who are quietly working in New York and making no boast, giving no hint, of their ancestry. Indeed, only a few years ago, an Englishman of an old and honored family, himself an officer of distinction who wore the Victoria Cross for bravery in battle, almost starved in a hall bedroom of an East Side, New York lodging-house.

On the contrary, however, there have been recent developments in New York which show how careful we must be about admitting foreigners into society. A writer in one of the newspapers was a real benefactor to the public when he called attention to the existence in this city of money lenders on foreign post-obit bonds, and of certain foreigners who received a pittance from these people. A significant bit of conversation overheard recently during the tea-hour at a hotel threw a wonderfully penetrating light on this situation. "It is hard pickings now," one foreign-looking man remarked to another; "one must live by dancing. What does that bring you? Only a free ticket and a cup of tea from some old woman; nothing more. Formerly I could do well at bridge and make a very decent living." The last bit of this confession is especially illuminating. Many of these men have been forced to leave their homes on account of card scandals, and it is well known that they can easily make "a decent living" by playing cards away from home.

One good question, however, to ask oneself about an apparently unattached foreigner is, "Why is he over here?" If he is a traveler, or if he is interested in a business enterprise, or if he is an agent of his government, all well and good; but no foreigner of good position at home is content to be a chevalier d'industrie. Personally, I am always suspicious of self-expatriated foreigners of high degree. But, perhaps, after all, Newport will not get many of them, as it has no hotel, and unless a man is a house guest he must perforce keep away.

AMERICAN HOSTESSES IN LONDON

In London the season is on with its state functions, great entertainments, and operas. Many of the principal hostesses are Anglo-Americans. Lady Cunard, daughter of the late E. F. Burke, will probably bring out her daughter this year, and Mrs. Francis H. Leggett had her daughter presented at a March Court. With Mrs. William B. Leeds—I pause when I write the name of a charming widow, because engagements and weddings follow so fast upon one another that before the ink is dry there may be another change of name—Mr. and Mrs. James B. Duke, and Mrs. Waldorf Astor, the Duchess of Roxburghe, the Duchess of Marlborough, and Lady Paget, all of them always gracious and hospitable, there is quite an Anglo-American circle in London. Mrs. Bradley Martin, who I hear, has taken a country estate near that of the Cravens, and the Countess of Craven are, of course, in mourning.

THE CYNIC IS RIGHT—

SO IS the SINGER

OUR spring poet is a standing joke; but at least he is able to stand. He suffers from a romantic oblivion of certain of the cold, wet facts of life which are sufficiently evident to his readers, and he is the more unfortunate in that the whole traditional poetic version of the spring is about a month too early for the climate of our quarter of the world. We read of the blustering winds of March, the showers of April, and the blossoms of May; but for most of us, March is still sheer winter, and the May-day of the British poets falls somewhere near the first of our June.

EVEN if we correct the lyric calendar, and go seeking the springtime of the singer at the season he really describes, we encounter many other and less pleasant matters undreamed of in his rosy philosophy: raw winds and roaring streams, sodden pathways and fields yet fallow with dead grass and shreds of dirty snow left over in the shady places to mock the coming of the flowers; and up to the very threshold of summer, a general untidiness as though nature needed housecleaning. This is mere obvious realism, but the strange thing is that we also find, among these very disillusionments, and somehow, as a very part of them, all the color and breath and music of the poet's dream. There are the blossoms, despite the mud and the dead grass; the pale baby-leaves that Corot loved; the birds' reawakened revelry; the new warmth in the light of the sun; and, surer than any of its outward symbols, the old mysterious rise of life and longing in our own blood answering to the freshness of the year. It is all true,—the Cynic and the Singer are both right; only each has told his own half of reality. And if ever a god had feet of clay, it is this young deity, the poet of Springtime: whereby—it may be worth observing—he avoids the reproach of footlessness, and walks the more securely with his head among the clouds.

EVERYTHING in the world, from the least thing to the greatest thing, has the same duality of sneer and song, the same mutual emphasis of glamor and absurdity. All the cheap jokes are quite correct. Roses have thorns, and they also have green bugs in them,—which is worse, because while pain may be taken in a spirit of high tragedy, the only refuge from nuisance is a sense of humor. Young love may not discover actually that Phyllis can not cook and that Corydon hides under the bed in the presence of a burglar; but it must learn just as surely that she has her unangelic futilities and that he is far other than a hero. They will squabble over little things and despair over less, and they will find marriage much more complicated and more bothersome than a honeymoon; for that matter, the honeymoon itself will be somewhat uncomfortable. A baby is a chubby, pink angel, and a sacramental miracle; it is also an unstable and messy little animal with a horrid faculty of producing penetrating and objectionable noise. One can not live honestly with it for a year without conceding that ugliest fact in the world, original sin; nor without discovering that most beautiful of facts, unreasoning love. Life is verily one long disillusionment, but the curious thing about it is that the process of disillusionment does not prove that the illusions are not there; it proves that they are not illusions. We pinch ourselves to be sure that we are awake, and recognize our dreams translated into the realities of common day. Thorns and green beetles prove the rose, and so improve it; for artificial roses have neither. And if there were nothing but roses, we should not know them from cabbages. Only by familiarity with ordinary speech do we care for song.

AND this is for us the value of the dual romance and realism of things,—that it answers to the like duality within ourselves. The wise old dreamers of the Middle Ages—to whom our modern science pays momentarily a greater tribute—called Man a microcosm, saying that he comprised in little all the elements that go to make the world. It is true enough that we are all of us beasts; but it is equally true, and more important, that we are all of us gods as well; we are even in a sense greater than either, by virtue of that very combination which is our humanity. All our work is only the realization of dreams. All our weddings are with heroes and angels who develop afterwards for our greater comfort into men and women. The reason why no religion has ever yet imagined a wholly satisfying heaven is really quite simple: they have all left Earth out of it, for heaven is Heaven only while it is above us, and our idols are the more divinely human for their feet of clay.

IN a CLUB BUT NOT of IT

"THE WOMEN," observed little Tom Stairst, dropping into a chair beside me at the Constitutional and reaching for the bell, "are getting knowing—very knowing! Here is a note just come to me from a girl up the state who has been put up at the Colony, and wants me to give her some points on the 'etiquette' of visiting in clubs. And twenty years ago, sir, they were passing these windows with their eyes cast down! Now it appears to be time some one should write a book on 'Betty at the Club, or What Every Girl Should Know.'"

Why, indeed, as Stairst suggests, should a paper not be written for this young woman to aid her in her new pursuit of club ethics, and even written in a spirit of social uplift worthy of the great Mr. McAllister? Seriously, she was quite right in applying to a "learned friend" in such a social emergency, because for either a man or a woman to be made the guest of a club is a compliment, and one wishes, on one's host's account as well as on one's own, to appear neither ignorant of its usages nor regardless of its conventions. What knowledge I have, therefore, of visiting in clubs of men, I propose to put at her disposal, and she may glean from it what she finds suitable to her own needs.

WOMEN'S CLUBS AS MEN SEE THEM

The modern woman's club is organized on lines precisely similar to those of masculine establishments; their comforts and exclusiveness have naturally been adopted, and—though I can discover no rules against pipe smoking in the house books of the women's clubs I have had the honor to inspect—all customs and regulations are practically alike. May I remark, besides, Mesdames, having enjoyed the pleasure of your hospitality, that your club houses are elegant, your foods a marvel, your servants quiet and well trained, your wines sound and properly tempered, and your entourage, in short, what one would expect to find in homes superintended by the ladies who constitute your board of governors and house committee? But let no one expect me to go from these things into more intimate secrets. At the Constitutional we have our own little confidences, and warn each other about this house and that, this person and the other, and shut our door for what appear to us sufficient reasons. I take it you indulge in the same freedom, and criticize and blackball on the same high moral grounds. I, therefore, will run no risk of your disfavor. Rather will I chat on visiting in clubs in general; any solecisms I may relate have all occurred, you will be good enough to recall, in strictly masculine organizations, while the elegance and politeness I may have occasion to cite, are merely what I hope you think we practise when by ourselves.

BEING A GUARANTEED GUEST

For an out-of-town guest the usual visit at a club is from three days to two weeks; and to be admitted one need only present a card signed by the secretary of the club to the clerk at the desk. Naturally, a member who puts up a guest invites him to luncheon or dinner and takes pains to introduce him among his friends. At the expiration of a visit, it is a politeness—not, however, much observed nowadays—to write a note to the secretary, thanking the club for its kind hospitality, and the pleasure of a visit in it. More frequently one simply sends a card in acknowledgment. It is also, of course, essential to ask at the desk before leaving whether there are any house charges, and if there are, to settle them in cash. Nothing hurts a guest's standing like leaving an unpaid account behind him, for a club debt is a debt of honor.

To be a visitor at a club is to be guaranteed by your host both socially and financially. He is responsible for every motor you hire, every meal or cup of tea or cocktail you sign for. He assures the members you are a perfectly proper person to know—and they prove to you that they believe it by never speaking to you unless personally introduced. For you, it is almost as unwarranted a liberty to address a member you do not know as it would be to assault him on the street. I remember a certain young journalist who had recently been elected to the Constitutional, venturing to say to old Southmeade, "Good morning. A pleasant morning."

"Sir," cried the outraged old gentleman, "I have been a member of this club for forty years. It's a pretty big place. If it isn't big enough for you and me both, I'll resign. Good day."

The snub was for the man, not the stranger, but I mention it as a warning to people coming from smaller towns, where every one in society is accounted for, to our larger New York clubs. While you are a guest, the club is yours; the members are known to you only when you are duly presented to them.

A CRITIC'S FATE

But whatever you do, or however much you may be taken into the bosom of the club and made to feel at home, remember you are a guest, and do not criticize. I shall never forget the deplorable consequences to my poor friend Smith of infringing this unwritten law.

Smith was a well-connected man. He was a modest, cheerful, kindly man—a man most unobjectionable and eligible in every sense. He came to New York quite frequently. We were always glad to put him up. He felt perfectly at home, and had made many friends. His name was actually up for election when, on one unlucky night, upon something going wrong in the club affairs, a number of the members wished to register their displeasure. Some one asked Smith to sign the complaint book with the rest. The thoughtless youth did as he was requested. Nobody said a word. But when his name was brought before the board of governors, was he elected? No. He was blackballed—unanimously. He had committed an unpardonable breach of club ethics, and the Constitutional flag will never fly at half-mast for him.

NO FRIENDS OF FRIENDS

Above all things, a card to a club is never worded "Mr. ——— and friends," and no guests are permitted to introduce strangers. A club is a home, guarded by every convention of selection; we entertain our friends for stated intervals, but not our friends' friends.

To a guest, indeed, arriving without his host, a strange club offers but cold hospitality, and I know of no place on earth where one is made to feel so intentionally, so evidently an outsider. You enter a room. The members are sitting about laughing and chatting, sipping and smoking. They glance at you. Each cheerful face freezes into our charming, Anglo-Saxon, how-the-deuce-did-you-get-here stare. You ring the bell, you order refreshment and spread out your newspaper. The talk goes on. Nobody notices you; unless you choked, they would not look at you again. You may order dinner and stay on every minute for a week; it will be just exactly the same.

If you are a veteran, you do not mind. You take it for granted. You would think the members in bad form if they welcomed you. You perfectly understand that they understand that you understand. If they are Brown's lot you'll meet them anyway; if they are not it does not matter. You are quite at ease for you know beforehand how gracefully familiar and cordial we all are to strangers. But if you are young or new at the game, it is safe to say you will never have felt so cut, so snubbed, and self-conscious in your life. You are vouched for by one of their own set; won't somebody speak to you, nod to you, throw you a word?

"MR. SMITH, MR. JONES"

"Where is our host?" says a man getting up. You wonder if perhaps he means you, whether, indeed, you did not make a mistake in coming by yourself—

Then presently Brown saunters in. Good old Brown; you were never so glad to see any one in your life. You beam at him. He introduces you. Chairs are brought to the table, and everybody all at once wants to ring the bell in your honor. In two minutes you are surrounded by the most genial, hospitable lot of men, who accept you as a matter of course and treat you as one of them. Surely—"Mr. Smith, Mr. Jones," is a wonderful formula for liberating pent-up good-fellowship and kindness, and for making the guest welcome to club hearthstones.

Scotch plaid, the rival of the Roman stripe, figures brightly in this Drécoll dress. The long, plaited tunic over the plain skirt, the sailor collar of plain taffeta, and the sparse, well-placed trimming suit this model to the girl in her teens

A black picot turban with a knotless bow of black or colored ribbon makes a capital hat for the summer tailor-made. The striped crêpe blouse suggests itself as a possible third part of the suit

The bolero of Spain and the blouse of Russia are agreeably united in this upper half of a street dress. Spring weight duvetyn, with braided ornaments that incorporate the bright colors of both countries, would make it very smart. For a guimpe, separate blouses simply made could be worn

The girl who would dance the summer away—and most girls will this year—might choose a Paquin frock, for none is more comfortably wide at the bottom. This model of tulle is kept from blowing away only by ropes of pearls

MUST DRESS LIKE HERSELF, AND HER RESTRICTIONS ARE PRE-

Having granted a long tunic to the prevailing mode, Callot makes the rest of the gown to suit herself, achieving a grace that warrants her presumption. She cuts the skirt of brown moire taffeta longer than the spring is supposed to favor, edges the black tulle with the same material, and enlivens the black and brown effect by putting upon the tulle bodice broad bands of burnt orange taffeta

A skirt of black taffeta with tight yoke above and meager loops below, which the tunic seems to begrudge as an abbreviation of its new length, is completed by a coat, sleeveless in compliance with the season's sleevelessness. The Gladstone collar of the coat meets at the throat, but the revers flare to display the écreu net bodice draped with "craquelé" lace, which is enjoying such high favor

A silk with a brocaded figure between stripes of light French blue and white suggests old-fashioned things—a suggestion which Callot accepts when she puffs the back of the skirt without lifting it, makes the sleeves tight, and drops the black velvet sash-ends quaintly in the front. From the sleeves and over the revers, which with their binding offer varied angles for the stripes, falls filet lace

A frock that is consistently Jeanne Lanvin in its girlishness and consistently old-fashioned in its use of white braid binding on white taffeta, and in the gathered puffings on the gathered skirt ruffles. Braided Lanvin roses are scattered—no, precisely placed, at carefully calculated intervals

The only tight things about this model are the cuffs and the skirt hem; everywhere else fulness prevails—in the bodice and sash of blue, amber, green, and yellow striped taffeta, and in the panier of plain blue silk. Large is the organdy collar, and full and deep are the cuff ruffles

Shinier than shellacked straw is bamboo, pressed by Lanvin into a turban to support four flaming pillars of metallized, burnt ostrich

A daintiness that makes them no less practical is given these rompers by the collar and cuffs of lawn, hemstitched and edged with lace. The fulness is confined by smocking

THE WOMAN WITH the HOE

In lieu of hours of painstaking designing one merely decides whether blue or green or rose color is becoming, and orders a half dozen blue or green or rose colored smocks

To Her Primitive Joy of Digging in Real Dirt the Wisest of All Gardeners Adds the Enormous Satisfaction of Wearing Smocks Colored Chameleon-wise to Suit Each Succeeding Season

TO the uninitiated a smock suggests one of two things: a loose and spotty blue linen garment worn by a painter, or a trim and tidy bit of linen worn by some child with very few years to her credit. To one who has been converted to the smock idea, however, it means a comfortable sort of garment-of-all-trades that has grown out of the summer needs of women who have come to take an active interest in their gardens, and who love to get down on their knees and dig.

To the gardener, smocks are heaven-sent garments that require little thought in their designing; one merely decides that blue or green or rose color is becoming, and orders half a dozen blue or green or rose colored smocks. However, one gardener who is called by her friends the "Wisest of All Gardeners," perhaps because she, her mother, and her grandmother have all been hard-working gardeners, has made an art of planning her garden outfits. For three generations her family has kept diaries of the daily progress of their garden on the Hudson, and this Wisest of All Gardeners has perfected the art of dressing sensibly and becomingly. Not only has she done this for herself, but she has proved the practical value of her ideas by launching a garden outfit business for the benefit of her pet charity. It is the function of this business to supply tools and smocks and aprons and baskets and garden diaries made and sold by real gardeners.

Not only is the Wisest of All Gardeners an authority on matters of this kind, but her friends go to her for fresh inspiration when their knees are sore from bending, and when they have forgotten where they planted the wall-flowers. She cheers them so that they make themselves smocks of gayer hue, paint the handles of their garden tools to match, don new sun-hats that will shade the blistered spots on the backs of their necks, and go back to their digging comforted.

This gardener believes that the garden is worthy of carefully planned smocks and hats and shoes and tools and baskets. However zealous she may be in advocating their use, she by no means originated the idea of smocks for general wear. Some artists found them in Kent on a visit at Edith Craig's ancient Tudor farmhouse, "Small Hythe." There were so many guests that they spilled out from under the tiny thatched roof and slept in barns at the homes of neighborly neighbors, and all of them wore smocks. They wore them all day long—put them on in the early morning and lived in them until dinner time, when English convention reasserted itself and every one dressed for dinner.

IMPORTING AN IDEA FROM KENT

These artists brought the smock habit back to America to their garden-loving friends, who live in them during all of the Long Island summer, and bring them into town in winter. In town they wear them over respectable gowns as one wears an apron, but in the country each and every one of them wears her smock over a short skirt or baggy khaki trousers. A smock of green linen, with a loose skirt of tough, green denim beneath it that comes just to the shoe tops is suggested as a practical beginning for a garden costume. It is desirable to purchase heavy, flat-soled, broad-heeled shoes, or perhaps sandals. She who hates the idea of a skirt, may wear loose bloomers or knickers of the same stuff as her smock, and thick stockings like those worn by small boys. The Wisest of All Gardeners herself wears knickers for real work, and hangs her skirt on the garden gate, which means "No Admittance!" She wears thick, loose, yellow chamois gloves, and smocks with long sleeves to protect her arms.

EVERYTHING OF A COLOR

This gardener makes her smocks of almost any material, and if she doesn't find the material the right color originally, she dips it in dye until it is the right color. One of the loveliest of her smocks is a hip-length one of coarse, unbleached muslin. It was first stitched and smocked; next it was dipped in yellow dye, then in red, and now, it is a soft, coral yellow-red, with the smocking touched up with black and yellow thread.

Another successful smock is made of a cheap, sleazy Canton flannel. This is a rather long one, dyed a deep orange, and worn over loose, blue denim trousers like those of the French baker boys. A loose sun-hat—which has also been dipped in the orange dye—with a blue ribbon about the crown, is worn with it.

The planting outfits possessed by the Wisest Gardener of All include a square splint basket painted whatever color harmonizes with the smock with which it is carried. Into raffia loops, twisted through the splints are fitted the garden tools with handles painted the color of the basket. Included also in each outfit is a small kneeling-pad of denim or burlap faced with oilcloth, and bound with carpet braid. These "rheumatism pads" save many an ache.

For the days when the digging is over and blossom time comes, the Wisest of All Gardeners has huge, flat gathering baskets fitted with shears and a spool of wire; the shears are attached to the basket by a woven cord of raffia. The gathering baskets are also painted in gay colors, and nothing pleasanter to the sight can be imagined than the Garden Lady in a yellow skirt and a green-blue smock, with a green-blue gathering basket piled high with pink roses.

THE LADY of the GARDEN

In a World Where Much Will Never Please Us, Let Us at Least
Make Our Lawns to Suit Ourselves

(Note.—Under the title, "The Lady of the Garden," Vogue is presenting a series of articles on garden lore. While these little essays are written in a charmingly dilettante manner, they nevertheless contain a rich vein of practical advice, for the Lady of the Garden writes as one who loves, and her gardener talks as one who knows)

I THINK that it is really quite too good a thing to be true—but it is true! And that is the way with everything about this seemingly enchanted bit of land, my garden. Whatever I have wanted to add, there has been ready at hand exactly the sort of place needed for it, in exactly the nicest, quaintest, most unexpected relation to the other parts. I can never quite understand it.

Given, in the first place, just an old Dutch, stone farmhouse, I suppose I might call it, standing not over seventy feet from the road over which, when the house was built, the mails were brought to the settlers along the Hudson; and given in the second place about a pocket-handkerchief of earth surface around it, it seems that nothing short of the special favor of the gods could have located the house so exactly right. It stands on the edge of a slope that falls away both to the south and west, and falls away sharply enough in the latter direction to let my stables and an entire service wing drop decorously out of sight.

All of which I am moved to consider because the plan which I have been having made to send to Wilhelmina has come from the surveyor, and I have been sitting here gloating over it and thanking my stars for my garden and for a gardener like Tully, to whose skill it is all a veritable monument. Indeed, I am prompted here and now to register a vow to set a tablet in the kitchen-garden wall, above the main gate that leads in between the glass houses, setting forth the fact that this is his work that he performed "A.D. 1905-1914." Why have I never thought of this before? Of course, his creation should be credited to him, quite as much as the dials or the hermæ in the winter garden are credited to their sculptors—or a picture to its painter, or a book to its author. I will word the inscription and attend to it at once, and surprise him with its "unveiling" on Patriots' Day, perhaps. He had an ancestor at Lexington, so that would be an added compliment, I am sure.

A MAP OF MOODS

The chief reason that I have been so anxious to send the complete survey to Wilhelmina is that the entire driveway arrangement and front "landscape" planting have been rearranged since the years ago that she went to the orient. As a matter of fact, though, I wanted a map of it all, myself, almost as much as I wanted to send her one, for I was simply consumed with the desire to know how our work would compare on paper with professional garden plans. Here in my garden each feature has come into existence independent of all the rest. There has been no preconceived plan, it has all grown in response to a wish or a need or a mood.

It was a mood that was finally the undoing of the old driveway. The wish to have it different had always existed, and so, from the artistic viewpoint, had the need of changing it. But it was just a wilful mood in me one day that actually brought about the change. We had all always detested that old driveway swinging in from the road and out to it again in the ugly half circle that brought us squarely to a front "front door," under a silly porte-cochère. But somehow we had never any of us had the wit to know where else to put it; so there it had stayed, year in and year out, swinging across the lawn on the arc of a little girl's jumping rope, which it described with maddening precision and accuracy, particularly when viewed from the windows of the sitting-room, above stairs.

GARDENING BY VISIONS

I spent days in walking about in circles, doubling on my tracks and squinting at this house corner and that tree, until the feathered denizens of the neighborhood nearly went out of their minds. At last, one day, I saw, as in a vision, the picture of the alterations completed exactly as they are now.

The changes involved were radical, indeed, and startled me. They included the alteration of the house entrance itself and demanded the addition of a little, odd-shaped wing—precisely the thing to give me the master's office, I had so long desired—and the elimination of the the gap where the second gateway had been at the northeast corner of the place; and these took their place naturally with the planting already there, because this was practically all coniferous, massed thickly as a protection to the winter garden, which is just south of this division. So this northeast corner is now really a lovely miniature pinetum, and I have had a seat tucked away in the midst of it, and a way opened out from the winter garden so that I may steal in there and sit and listen to the whisperings above that are never stilled.

The great beech tree, which it is quite possible to believe is as old as the house itself, was, of course, to be preserved at all cost. Here again the fates were on my side, for it stood just where it could

The shifting sun upon the beeches and the silvery shadows among their leaves delighted the heart of the artist and tempted him out daily to paint that corner of the lawn porte-cochère. The driveway was to be shortened and concentrated into a big, graveled turn-around that would permit one gate to serve, and one gate ought to, always.

Of course, the rearrangement brought what lawn there was before the old house into much better shape for treatment, for it was no longer divided; and further, it was no longer so open and vulgarly inviting from the road. In the old days it was as eager looking as the dooryard of an inn. More pines went in at once, to close serve as the pivot of the new turn in the drive, and be also "the great tree before the door" that was as much a part of home to the good Dutchman in days of yore as his house itself. It had not stood before the door in the beginning, for the old door was actually in front, and the tree well off at the side; but this is just another instance of how wonderfully everything worked out, for now it is before the door, as it should be.

Trellises and vines over the walls of the garage—which was the stable—have done away with the difficulty of a lack of proper distance between it and the recessed house entrance which it faces. As a matter of fact, the living portions of the house are as completely cut off from this utilitarian quarter as though they were a mile apart.

SHADES OF AN ABORIGINAL FOREST!

Several of the old trees had to come out, and the old shrubbery had all to be moved, in order to clear up the lawn and give it the broad, unbroken sweep I had resolved it should have. I mourned these trees less than would be supposed, however, because I little loved their kinds—fancy exotics every one of them, and each different from its neighbor. Here, for example, on my lawn, grew this one fine old native beech, with two horse-chestnuts, a Norway maple, a European linden, an angelica-tree from Manchuria, an empress-tree, and a ginkgo-tree from Japan, a cork-tree from China, several Lombardy poplars, and a Babylonian weeping willow to keep them company. Shades of the aboriginal forest, what a collection—and Tully admired it!

The poplars still stand, and the linden—but the others, all save the dear old weeping willow, I condemned without a quiver. The willow I did regret. I was comforted, however, when I had planted a lusty young shoot that I cut from it, over beyond the beech at the end of the retaining wall which divides the upper level drive from the lower level one to the garage. In this position it will sway and sweep and weep over a slope as it grows up, as the willows of Babylon always should. It will break up the great width of the driveways here very pleasantly, and seclude the entrance more completely from the road, as well as screen, in a measure, the plunge to the basement floor of the garage.

The linden stood near the old east or northeast gate, so now it is fairly in the midst of the pine grove—anomalous to be sure, but not seriously so. The poplars were grouped about the west gate, and are therefore the sentinels on guard at the present entrance. I am delighted to have them, green exclamations of welcome, gracious yet never effusive.

NEW TREES FOR OLD

To choose new trees more suited to the place than the assortment it had so long entertained, was the task I set myself, never suspecting the difficulties ahead. Of course, the people who had

AN ART OUT of the HANDS of PEASANTS

FASHION in household furnishings changes so gradually that it is apt to seem a very different thing from the fashion that governs gowns and hats, yet it is ultimately as radical in its variations in the one case as in the other. At present, even, there is developing a style in household furnishings which is distinctively new in its effect, though old in its inspiration.

This new ideal is due largely to the widespread interest in the simple peasant arts of Europe, especially those of Austria and Hungary. So much inspiration has been drawn from the peasant industries of all countries that it is impossible to tell where the influence of one ends and another begins. It might seem that this haphazard combination of ideas would breed confusion and be unfortunate in its effect, but on the contrary, the artists who are giving their time to this new work are creating objects far more interesting in color and design than those usually offered for the simple uses of the home.

Of course, in America, there are no peasant traditions on which to base a revival of decorative art, so inspiration must come from the primitive art work of other countries. We are charmed with the naïveté of the peasant who paints his plow handles and the many tools of his daily work, and we know these things are good because they are sincere expressions of his point of view. The fact that utility is never sacrificed to ornamentation makes for sound design. We do not wish to imitate the peasant, but we can learn to appreciate his sincerity, and so arrive at sincerity in our own expression. As a result of studying these artists, who are unhampered by tradition, the value of color is coming to be understood as never before, and is being used more daringly; and a second result is this same interest in the beautifying of household utilities. Even famous portrait-painters are now taking time to decorate the doors of their kitchen cupboards. They would gladly paint the cupboard doors of other men, too, for a consideration, but it is unusual to think of cupboards as having decorative possibilities, and few are willing to pay the artist's price.

THE DECORATIVE SPICE CAN

At the Modernist Studios, in New York, there are shown objects for household use which are really decorative, really original, and really American. Yet so unprepared are people for new ideas that the usual visitor's first question is, "From what is this copied?" It seems difficult to understand that a goldfish bowl may be as much an original creation as a painting. More than a dozen members of the Studios, who have proved themselves as illustrators and painters, are giving their spare moments to painting flower-pots, and kitchen clocks, and breakfast sets, and they are having a beautiful time doing it. They much prefer to decorate a spice can for the kitchen than to do an illustration for a popular novel, but they can not always afford to do it. When the popular taste is awakened to the charm of courageous color, to the fascination of brave design, more and more artists will turn their talents to the designing of furniture, of textiles, of wall-papers, and of the thousand and one objects that are considered necessary in our houses.

Consider, for instance, the familiar picture-frame. We are so accustomed to going to a conventional shop and selecting the usual gold or black or brown frames for our prints that we are a little startled at the idea of picture-frames especially decorated for each one. At the Modernist Studios there is a series of charming costume prints in gay color, with frames made of unfinished wood decorated in conventional checks, circles, or lines of just the color that will bring the print into its proper importance. These frames are quite inexpensive, and are never alike in their design, which is quite as it should be, for every print suggests a different frame to enhance it.

BIRD STICKS AND ODD MIRRORS

Mirror frames, also, lend themselves to bold decoration. There are at these Studios two very beautiful ones by Junius Cravens, both of which are photographed just below the middle of this page. One is in green and black lacquered checks; the other is black with a conventionalized border of leaves in gold. Mr. Cravens has besides these frames two very lovely goldfish bowls in green lacquer on glass, which are illustrated at the bottom of the page. One of them has only a broad band of green at the rim, but the other is more elaborate, with a green vine trailing over it. The orange colored fish which the bowl is supposed to hold are deliberately considered as part of the color scheme.

Claire Avery, who is well-known for her delicate character sketches in black and white, has found a new pleasure in designing bird sticks to support rose-bushes, or ivy plants, or what not, and incidentally to bring a new note of color into the garden. These bird sticks, two of which are shown in photographs at opposite sides of the Dutch cabinet above, are lacquered black, and the little birds at the top are painted in bright color. Miss Avery has also painted ordinary flower-pots that are as bold in color as modern Viennese potteries. One of those illustrated with the bird sticks is black with orange and yellow checks at the top. The other is black with an upright decoration of strong blue, and both are about nine inches in height.

DARING WHAT the LAYMAN DARES NOT

AN ideal summer home is that of Albert Herter, the well-known New York mural decorator and designer of tapestries and textiles, to whom is due in so large measure the revival in America of the old methods of tapestry making. The stucco house, long and low, with side wings at angles to the main house, is sheltered beneath a projecting roof of tiles and half hidden under vine-covered trellises. The latticed, casement windows open to every breeze, and a delightful garden surrounds the house.

"PRÉS CHOISIS"

"Prés Choisis" is the fitting name of this delightful place, chosen by Mr. and Mrs. Herter after long search and the investigation of many possible sites. Set high on a hill, the house stands beneath towering trees, as if it, too, had grown from the earth, and looks down long flights of broad, low steps and over a succession of terraces to the waters of a lake. The soil here, once covered with a tangle of wild flowers, has given welcome to every new plant and vine, until flowers grow everywhere. They fill great beds with masses of solid color; they climb upon the house; they droop over the terraces, walks; they run riot on the terraces, and lean over the water at the foot of the long steps. Nor in the house does one leave flowers behind, for here they lend their note of appropriate color to the decoration of every room.

EAST RULES WEST

Within the house, the spirit of the east predominates. The rich colors of the east and its rugs, carvings, and decorative designs enrich nearly every room. On the stairway of the entrance hall, a red paint suggesting that of the Chinese lacquer of furniture has been used, while the rest of the woodwork of the hall is an ivory white. The glowing, tawny red of the stairs is repeated in the carpet of Chinese design on stairs and hall, where it is combined with tones of blue and orange. A lantern of eastern design lights the hallway and a Japanese night-light stands on the table by the stairs.

GOLD WITHOUT GLITTER

Gold has been chosen as the predominating color of the living-room—not the bright gold which weighs one down with oppressive gaudiness, but a softened, dulled gold, almost a neutral tone, which is yet vibrant and full of life. Such a gold as this is not too rich for the wood furniture of simple lines and is wholly in accord with the wicker chairs of the hour-glass style beloved of the east. Walls, woodwork, and furniture are of this mellow gold, and the same shade of tawny yellow runs through the oriental rugs on the floor. The east speaks again in the mantel which, though designed by Mr. Herter, is of Chinese inspiration. Ornamental plaques in cloisonné enamel, attached to the wood, give color and distinction to this mantel, above which is a large panel in Chinese design, by Mr. Herter. Completing touches of color are carried throughout the room in the flowered lamp-shades, and the flowers which are so lavishly used as to form a part of the scheme of decoration.

TWO DINING-ROOMS

The dining-room adjoins the living-room and carries on the prevailing gold of its decoration, subtly combining it with blue and green. The walls are covered with a gold Japanese paper with a chrysanthemum design. The recessed overmantel is composed of a beautiful panel of a design wholly eastern in feeling, the work of Mr. Herter; it is composed of two white peacocks, white peonies, and pine branches. The furniture, simple almost to severity in line, carries the prevailing colors of the room — oriental blue, green, and gold. From this dining-room one enters the most delightful of sunny rooms, in which wide windows and lattice-lined walls, overgrown with vines, give all the charm of an outdoor dining-room. Here one may breakfast or lunch, shielded from summer storm or winter cold, yet feel the beauty of the garden all about. The lattice is of an indefinite gray-green, soft and inconspicuous beneath the growing vines. To emphasize sunlight or to give the illusion of sunshine on stormy days, much yellow is used in this room. The table, stained with a transparent green stain which does not conceal the grain of the wood, is decorated with roses lightly incised and overlaid with gold leaf. All the doilies are dyed yellow; yellow flowers are massed in the central vase; and the china is decorated with designs of fruits in orange and green.

THE STUDIO OF MRS. HERTER

Occupying the main floor of one wing of the house, and reached by descending a short flight of steps from the hall, is the studio of Mrs. Herter, who is well-known as a portrait-painter. The studio of Mr. Herter is a separate building at a short distance from the house. The influence of the east is even more pronounced in Mrs. Herter's studio than elsewhere in the house. The main feature of this room is the large overmantel of the fireplace, for which the portal of a Chinese house with its uptilted roof corners has been adapted. The carvings of this mantel extend across the tops of paneled doors on either side, and the wide doorway at the left is also decorated with carving. A striking decoration of the Chinese mantel is the huge bunches of peacock feathers secured to the upturned corners on either side. An India hanging forms a deep frieze on the wall above the mantel. The woodwork in the studio, painted a neutral tone, has inset panels of a gold, which, like the gold of the living-room, is dulled and softened so that it counts as a luminous brown save where it catches the light and brilliantly reflects it.

A "CHINTZ" COLOR SCHEME

The guest who mounts the tawny red staircase will find bedrooms charming in their simplicity of line, fresh and interesting in their scheme of color. In one bedroom, the entire color scheme has been worked out from the chintz which covers the bed and chairs. Gray-green, blue, and orange are combined in the pattern of this chintz. Orange moldings divide the wall into broad panels, and orange bricks set in creamy mortar form the fireplace, which is set in a wood mantel of creamy white. The furniture, which is very simple in construction, is enameled in cream white with fine stripes of gray-green and orange. The painted designs on the furniture are carried out in the orange, green, and blue of the cool, decorative chintz.

EXPLAINING THE IDEAL

The home of an artist in decoration must be of interest to all who seek beautiful furnishings, for here the artist works untrammelled by the ideas of others, to express his ideal of a beautiful home. An unusual measure of success has been attained by Mr. and Mrs. Herter in the decoration of Prés Choisis, both within and without. The house with its wide, spreading terraces, broad entrance, and spacious rooms, expresses the hospitality which they so gladly extend, and their daring use of color finds its own justification. That, in their own minds, the house expresses their ideal of a home, may be guessed from the fact that it shelters them for some ten months of the year, while the town house is almost forgotten.

By the light of Chinese lanterns hung on either side, the great white peacocks of the dining-room overmantel, done in the decorative spirit of Chinese artists, trail beneath pines, spreading their feathers among great peonies. This panel, Mr. Herter's own work, finds its place above a Chinese mantel

A delightful room for breakfast or luncheon has all the charm of out-of-doors, yet is sheltered. The lattice is green, the rugs are twine color, and the oak table is stained green and decorated with roses carved and gilded

A cool, restful bedroom takes its colors from the gray-green, blue, and orange of the chintz on the bed, has orange bricks set in a cream mortar for the fireplace, and carries the orange tone to the walls in painted moldings

The studio of Mrs. Herter gives the place of honor to a striking overmantel adapted from the portal of a Chinese house. Great bunches of peacock feathers spread their gorgeous colors on either side, and an interesting India hanging forms a frieze above

ILLUMINATION WHICH IS DECORATION

To Center the Color Scheme by a Single Daring Touch, to Relieve Monotony and Complete Harmony, Such Is the Mission of the Lamp

IN the lighting of a house, almost any desired effect can be produced if proper care and thought are given to the selection and placing of the lamps. Unfortunately, few people realize how important a part the lamp plays in the decoration of a room. The fixtures for electric lights may be most carefully thought out and specially designed, but the lamp, as a thing less permanent, is quite likely to be casually picked up here or there, sent home, tried in different rooms, and left in whichever one it chances to suit best. Yet, in reality, few things more directly affect the artistic success of a room than the choice and placing of the lamps.

BATIK PROCESS SHADES

With this article are illustrated lamps of varying styles and excellent design, which are sold at from $40 to $65. All the shades shown are of silk dyed by the "batik process," a method which has been used for generations by the natives of Java in decorating their costumes and dress materials. This process requires a great deal of labor and time. The design is drawn on white silk, and is then covered with liquid wax laid on with a very small copper instrument. When the wax has hardened, the whole piece of silk is dipped in dye of the color desired for the background. The silk is then immersed in hot water which dissolves the wax, and leaves the design in white on the colored background. This is the simplest form of the process, which becomes more complicated when many colors are used, and is sometimes combined with other methods of coloring, as in the lamp at the lower left corner on this page, where the colors of the flowers and leaves in the baskets were put in with a brush. In these ways, any desired color can be obtained in the design and every lamp may, to the smallest detail, be in keeping with the rest of the decorative color scheme of a room.

CONTRASTING COLORS IN DECORATION

Many a room which seems completely furnished leaves one with a sense of something lacking. It is not difficult to decorate a room with one predominating color. The test of the decorator's ability lies in the introduction of the contrasting colors, which a room, like a painting, always needs. In these, not quantity but quality is required, and a lamp well selected may give the decisive note which completes and centralizes the whole decorative scheme.

In the lamps illustrated here, the requirements of rooms of different styles have been considered. The Adam lamp, of course, suggests the Adam room of delicate color, graceful line, and classic inspiration. The "black hawthorn" lamp would be delightful in a Chinese Chipendale room. The Dutch pottery lamp would find welcome in a room where subdued colors predominate, while the two carved wood lamps, silver and gilt respectively, are appropriate to rooms of many kinds. So much can not be said, however, of the lamp of cream porcelain, which must be placed with great care, for its shade of glowing red, while most effective in certain rooms, would cry down the colors of many a room, and, far from centering the scheme, would stand out as an unrelated feature.

Supported by a well-designed wood base, silvered, is a shade of pink-lavender silk and silver gimp, hand-decorated

Adam designs in white decorate a Wedgwood base and a silk shade of the delicate green used by the Adam brothers. White and silver outline the panels

Quiet and harmonious is this lamp of deep cream, gray-blue, and chocolate brown, in which the silk of the shade takes its pattern from the base of soft-hued, Dutch pottery

The brilliant red shade with a design in white and green used on a base of cream Chinese porcelain is a daring bit of color for judicious use

THE ENGLISH RETURN to NATURE

A SUMMER home may be here (which means England), there (by which is signified the Continent), or anywhere (America, perhaps, Egypt, or Afghanistan); but a week-end cottage must be near one's city of residence. And a week-end cottage, for those who contemplate any considerable part of a summer in town, is a corollary of existence. Englishwomen especially detest hotels with their tourist hordes, their indifferent menus and attendance, and prefer a private dwelling, however unpretentious, where they may entertain their friends and from which they may exclude the stranger. They have scoured every corner of their tight little island to find attractive summer homes. In England, of course, it is something of a misdemeanor to build anything brand-new and shiny; the correct thing to do is to discover something old and quaint and mossy. So the Englishwoman explores.

In her search she has been obliged to wander far afield, for the "detached villa" of the English suburbs is an abomination, and by its very pretentiousness an insult to the intelligence of the tenant. There is in this search not only the charm of discovery, but also the delight of rescuing an artistic abode from the possession of unappreciative rustics, who have no reverence for old oak, and who regard a carved, stone fireplace with stolid indifference.

LAVENDER-SCENTED DISCOMFORT

With these old treasures go old discomforts, but what reckes the woman in search of a week-end home? These discomforts are associated with history and the faint scent of lavender. A woman to whom a perfumed bath is a necessity in town, will content herself in the country with a small tin tub in front of the fire, provided she has just slept in a genuine, Jacobean four-poster, hung with just the right kind of flowered chintz. She will sacrifice her devotion to a silk-shaded, electric lamp beside her bed for a flickering candle, so long as it flickers in a Queen Anne, brass candlestick. And if, as is sometimes the case, modern bathrooms and electric lights have been introduced into these old-world cottages, this compromise is resented as rather inappropriate and not altogether "in the picture." As to the outside of the cottage, half-timbered houses are regarded with special favor; their black-and-whiteness seems to appeal to nearly every taste, and no modern style of architecture has succeeded in quite displacing them from their particular niche in the regard of the Englishwoman who would a-week-ending go.

Not to be outdone by Marie Antoinette with her rustic hamlet, English society adopts such rustic cottages as "King's Farm," the old and unmodernized preferred

INTERESTING "WEEK-ENDERS"

Among the most ardent of the "week-enders" are members of the world of art who actually need such little retreats in which to rest. Miss Ellen Terry, for one, has a country home which she calls "The Farm," pleasantly tucked away in the quaint village of Smallhythe, in Kent, which can easily be reached by motor from London. Her cottage is a soul-satisfying discovery—a quiet, restful little place, built in the time of Henry VIII, and it has never been defaced in any way. The beloved English actress has succeeded in making the entire interior of her home both livable and interesting. The kitchen, with its fine collection of pewter, is perhaps the most fascinating room in the house.

Another interesting, small, old house is "King's Farm" at Chorley Wood, now owned by the Hon. Arthur Algernon Capell, uncle of the Earl of Essex, who has restored it as nearly as possible to its original condition. The living-room is said to be exactly as it was when, in 1672, it was the scene of the marriage of William Penn and Gulielma Springett. The substantial, beamed ceiling is of oak, and white walls serve to throw into relief the somber dignity of the furniture. The exterior of the house is charming, and the well garden, which

It was hardly likely that our prized and expressive word "smart" would escape French usage, and here it appears, and most appropriately, as the exhibition name of this suit. Gray gabardine is the modest background for a Poiret color scheme, viz.: green pipings edge collar and cuffs, and cord the sleeves; green, red, and white enter into the making of the belt that girds the godet plaits of the full coat which is characteristic of this house; and the hat of light yellow straw carries the green and red tones in cloth bindings, with a flowered white satin crown above. "Smart," indeed!

This suit lives up to its name of "Canari" by being made of canary yellow serge with the black of the bird's wing in the trimming bands of taffeta. This coat, too, has a godet fulness held in by a belt which crosses the front of the gown. This front is oddly seamed in a V which prolongs its point all the way to the hem. Poiret, who is also Martine, uses the latter's silk—red flowers on a black ground—to line coat and standing collar. The yellow hat is a lampshade affair, frilled about its edge with black taffeta and crowned with white satin striped and flowered in black

'Mexico' heralds the approach of this suit, and though it is not Mexican in construction it is in coloring. The short coat and the long tunic are of dark, brick colored serge; the vest, the strappings (edged with yellow silk cord), the cuffs, and the skirt are of black taffeta striped in yellow and red; the buttons are of red galalite; and the tiny pocket is bound with yellow silk. It will be noted that Poiret is showing the very long tunic with the skirt narrow at the hem only; so he, too, may be going to widen his skirts. In back the opening of the skirt is seen below the jacket

WHAT'S NEW in SUMMER FURNISHINGS

A NEW oak furniture which possesses the advantage of being both good-looking and inexpensive is being introduced by a well-known shop this spring. For this furniture, which is known as Normandy, the oak is treated by a process which reveals and emphasizes the grain of the oak, and gives either a gray or a soft brown color. Upon this ground of gray or brown, a decoration in dull gold is stenciled. In design, this furniture is related to that made in England at the time of Sheraton. At the top of this page are shown, from Proctor & Co., two such chairs beside two tables combined to form a graceful, oval tea-table. These tables may also be used separately, placed against the wall as consoles.

A NEW FURNITURE FROM OLD DESIGNS

This new oak furniture is especially adapted to country homes, where a tasteful and unusual effect is desired for a somewhat modest expenditure. Suitable furniture for dining-room, bedroom, living-room, even for veranda, is made by this process. Special finishes for individual plans of decoration can be completed within a few weeks.

A particularly successful use of this furniture has been made in a large living-room with a somewhat low ceiling where the walls are covered with gold,

Turning from the overworked Spanish mission designs, makers of oak furniture borrow from Sheraton models, add a soft gray or brown finish, and brighten by gold stenciling

Japanese grasscloth. Against this dull gold ground are set a number of pieces of "Normandy" furniture in the softest brown finish, with a stenciled decoration of the exact shade of old-gold which appears in the wall covering. A large and luxurious settee gives an inviting air of comfort, and many armchairs, a rocker, and several single chairs are grouped about a large table. Upon settee and chairs are thrown cushions of a beautiful, hand-blocked taffeta, which is also used for window draperies. The extremely rich design of this silk is in dull blue and old-red upon an écru ground. Beneath the silk draperies, next the glass of the window, hang sash curtains of thin, Tudor silk of a shade of old-blue which matches the blue of the taffeta hangings, and upon the floor is an inexpensive rug in brown, old-gold, and dull blue. "Normandy" furniture in gray has also been used for a guest room in which the walls are covered with cartridge paper of darker gray. Moss green appears in carpet, curtains, cushions, and cretonne-covered accessories.

THE REVIVAL OF LACQUER

Lacquer furniture, popular in England during the reigns of William and Mary and of Queen Anne, has attained renewed popularity. Its delicacy and grace entitle it to consideration for the carefully furnished country home, for the very spirit of lacquer furniture is that of daintiness and brightness. On this page is shown an especially beautiful lacquer settee in the style of Sheraton, with painted panels of roses and foliage in old-reds, yellows, and greens; it has a cane seat. The large, oblong cushion on the settee is of Chinese brocade in gold, on a background of black silk.

A beautiful and useful settee for the hall is the antique bench shown on this page. This settee, which is dated 1772, is fitted with a seat which lifts up to disclose a chest for golf sticks, tennis racquets, and the thousand and one objects which gather in the hall in the summer. These two settees are from Wanamaker.

A useful inmate of the hall is this decorative box settee, which gathers within its capacious seat golf sticks and tennis racquets and all the litter of the hall of a country house

TABLE FITTINGS WHICH FIT the SUMMER HOME

THE attractive silver, china, and linens that the shops are now showing inspire one to take a house in the country immediately just to buy and possess these lovely furnishings. At the top of the page is shown one of the newest styles of linens for the country house. Of natural color linen, these doilies are embroidered in browns and yellows, with a bit of blue and green, in a design of penguins, for colored embroidery is in vogue once more. To be sure, as in all revivals of fashions, whether in clothes or linens, the new treatment owes much to the old. This use of natural linen is greatly in favor this spring. The homey tone is especially attractive for the luncheon table in the country where one likes to play at rural simplicity. The centerpiece is twenty-eight inches in diameter; the twelve large doilies which accompany it are twelve inches wide, and the smaller ones, six inches. The price of this doily set complete is $85.

To many people, one of the greatest charms of life in the country is a chance to surround themselves with simple, informal furnishings in contrast to those in use in town in the winter months. This charm need not belong to furniture and draperies exclusively; it can be carried even to china, linens, and silver. The little egg-cup and toast rack shown below are in bright colors and odd designs. They are priced $2.75 and $1.50 respectively, and are delightfully informal. The tea-set illustrated at the bottom of the page is in a "pheasant" pattern, and is very gay in yellow, red, green, blue, and even black. It may be matched in a complete service of one hundred and eight pieces for $35. The pieces of the tea-set, sold separately, are priced at $1.65 for the large teapot, $1.10 for the sugar bowl, 65 cents for the cream pitcher, and $4.50 a dozen for the cups and saucers. The plate illustrated at the left of the tea-set may be had in an eight-inch size, at $3 a dozen. A complete set of one hundred and eight pieces of the same ware sells at $23. At the right is a dinner plate of "Rusticana" ware. These plates are $3 a dozen.

The larger pieces of silver illustrated with this article are of modern Sheffield plate. The platter comes in four sizes, at prices from $8.75 to $18, and the vegetable dish is priced at $10. The Sheffield gravy-boat in half-pint size sells for $6.50. A set of table silver of very attractive pattern illustrated on this page contains forty-five pieces of an excellent quality of silver plate in a Georgian pattern, and may be had in either bright or French gray finish. Packed in a plush-lined mahogany case, this set is easily shipped and convenient to pack away. The set is priced at $39.

VEERING WITH EVERY WIND

FOR inspiration in the construction and adornment of American buildings the arts and crafts of many countries and divers periods are drawn upon. The architecture of an American country house may be that of a thatched cottage in Surrey or Devonshire, an old palace in Seville with an open patio overgrown with roses, or it may be patterned after one of the olden, half-timber structures of Rouen, Rheims, or Bruges. Nor are the details of period architecture neglected; the tiles which pave the floors of the American country house, the glass in the windows, and the old metal knockers upon the doors, are often reproductions. Among all these minor revivals it is surprising that the weather-vane has been so long in coming back into its own, but its possibilities have at last been rediscovered and again, with all its old-time grace and quaintness, the vane shows which way the wind blows.

WEATHER-VANE HISTORY

Like the sun-dial, the weather-vane has a history which extends back into the dim twilight of tradition. In one form or another it was used by the Greeks, passed on by them to the Romans, and bequeathed in turn to the western world. The metal smiths, particularly in France, England, and the northern countries, were quick to appreciate its decorative possibilities, and the vane shortly appeared upon château, castle, church, manor-house, or schloss, in forms highly individual and distinctive. It may have been that the frequent appearance of the weather-vane upon churches and other ecclesiastical structures formerly led, to some extent, to its being considered appropriate only in such positions. In America it has until lately not been much used upon secular buildings, and when it has appeared upon them it has usually been in the form of an arrow. The cock is an ancient and appropriately symbolic design for a church, for it represents watchfulness, and as it veers about in mid-air, facing first one way then the other, it typifies the unceasing vigilance of the church. Upon a farm building or a stable, the vane has, until recently at least, appeared in the somewhat uninteresting guise of a gilded steed galloping in mid-air. Among the few exceptions to the early American rule of banality in such matters are two ancient vanes in New England; one in the form of a gigantic grasshopper upon Faneuil Hall in Boston, and the famous whale upon the spire of the meeting-house at Marblehead. The whale is doubtless a tribute to the early fishing industries.

IN APPROPRIATE GUISE

Since the beginning of the present popularity of the weather-vane, it has appeared in a great variety of guises, appropriate each to the place in which it appears. The very ease with which it may be adapted to varying conditions has largely influenced its revival and increasing vogue. A book-plate, besides bearing the name of the owner, is designed with decided reference to his tastes or hobbies—often his profession or business—and a weather-vane should, in much the same manner, convey some suggestion as to the use to which the building it guards is devoted.

Upon a boat-house, a boating club house, or upon a building associated in any way with maritime interests or pursuits, the vane may fittingly appear as a ship, a yacht, or, if a type highly individual and picturesque be desired, in the form of a medieval Spanish galleon. If the vane shows a coach and horses it may be assumed that the building which it tops belongs to a coaching club or to a wayside inn. A garage might fittingly have for its weather-vane some form of a motor; for a schoolhouse, a golf or country club, or a gate lodge, there are numberless appropriate designs.

A vague, unwritten law once decreed that but one vane should be used upon an estate, or that if more than one were used they must be so placed that no two might meet the eye of an observer at the same time. Unwritten laws, however, must often give way before practice, and with vanes so many, so varied, and so easily designed, they often appear now upon several buildings of the same estate, and in places which hitherto have never before boasted a weather-vane.

The design of a weather-vane must be bold, decorative, and highly spirited, for it is cut out in silhouette; it must show no great amount of detail, and such as it may possess must be simply and boldly indicated with a few well-placed, dashing lines. The material of a vane may be sheet metal, brass, iron, copper, thin wood, or, perhaps, wood between two thin sheets of metal; whatever the material, it may be blackened to heighten the silhouette. Details which stand out in any way from the body of the design must be braced or strengthened, for upon the roof of a building a vane will be exposed to many variations of temper upon the part of Boreas whose whims it must register; and while almost any vane may easily weather the gentle zephyrs of summer, only a well-made one is sufficiently strong to withstand the furious blasts of cold and cruel winter.

VANES IN THE MAKING

Any one who aspires to membership in the ancient and honorable guild of weather-vane makers may well ponder upon certain mechanical details of their designing which are fully as important as their drawing. Vanes are, of course, poised upon vertical supports, and the weight must be evenly distributed upon each side of the upright. At the same time the vane must possess an expanse of surface much greater upon one side of the support than upon the other for, whatever be its design, it should face the wind which will naturally cause the vane to veer about with the larger surface upon the side toward which the wind is blowing. This necessary difference of expanse of surface, while each side must be of precisely the same weight, often involves the use of some method of weighting to retain the correct balance.

The chief duty of the weather-vane is naturally to point the direction of the wind, but almost as important is the lending of its utility to a decorative form which may confer just the required touch of architectural precision or expression to the building upon which it is set. This disguising of utility under the garb of beauty and individuality was an art wherein the medieval weather-vane makers excelled. The objects of every-day utility could be very cleverly fashioned by them into objects of beauty and interest, and their successors of the present day have caught much of the spirit which made their work interesting, attractive, and enduring.

Imported Capes and Coats and Surprisingly Accurate Copies of Imported Blouses—The First Spring Bathing Suit

This checked cape with vest of plain color is equally smart for motoring, traveling, or general wear. Cape, $19.50; hat, $9.95

THERE is no doubt that the cape has arrived and is being included in the smart spring wardrobes, for it is shown by the best dressmakers and the best shops, and is already being worn by smart women. Capes for evening wear have been a feature of dress for some time, but daytime capes are a lately revived fashion. It is not surprising to see the cape restored to favor at this time, for it has been "out" for a long while, and it really seems to "belong" to the fluffiness of this season; nothing is more suitable for wear over the beruffled spring and summer frocks than such a cape.

THE REAPPEARANCE OF THE CAPE

The cape illustrated at the upper left on this page is an inexpensive rendition of the mode. Coming, as this model does, in the widest variety of materials, it may be used for motoring, traveling, steamer use, or for general wear. As it is shown, the cape itself is of a new black and white checked velours de laine. The collar and the vest, which is as deep as the cape and has a silk back, are of white golfine.

The same model is developed with the vest of white cloth, and it may be had also in white cloth with a very smart black and white checked cloth vest. One green and blue plaid cape has a brilliant green golfine vest. The large pockets and plain belt of the vest add a great deal to the general chic appearance of the wrap. It is interesting to note that an enterprising shop has been farsighted enough to import these capes at a price that makes them possible as an addition to almost any wardrobe.

The pretty little hat shown with the cape just described is of Belgian split straw, which is oftentimes referred to as liséré. It is faced and trimmed with taffeta, and may be had to order in colors or in black. A model such as this is excellent for a hat that is to be worn a great deal. For traveling it is most satisfactory, especially as it holds its shape well and only needs a little brushing to make it appear quite fresh.

THE FLARE OF 1914

Imported at the same time as were the capes described were the two coats which appear on this page. The one sketched at the upper right of the page is one of the best top-coats that has appeared this spring. It is plain, and yet is extremely good style—a combination not easy to find, but one that when once found is instantly recognized as successful. This coat is made of a new cloth—so new it is nameless—which greatly resembles an especially light-weight velours de laine but has a softer, more suède-like surface, and is an altogether delightful, surprisingly light fabric. The flare of the seamless back represents a marvel in cutting. The deep pockets at either side are both effective and convenient, and the collar is becomingly soft and rolling, as are all the newest collars. This coat is developed in such colors as leather, midnight blue, tango, the new brilliant green—a charming shade a bit bluer than Empire and equally bright—white, and black—the blackest of black, a color not always found in such summer fabrics.

The very daring little hat shown with the model described oddly enough repeats the color note and almost the material of the coat. It is of white hemp and a suède cloth which may be ordered in the same tone as the coat.

A BEACH COAT AND A BEACH SUIT

The other coat sketched is an imported one also, and is a particularly good beach coat of an excellent quality of light-weight golfine. It is unlined and may be had in black, white, the chartreuse which is so very much in evidence this year, green, a soft blue, or the never missing tango golfine. The price of this coat is particularly reasonable.

With this model is sketched a pretty little hat of the new shiny rough straw, a very suitable hat for the coat. It is in a slightly mushroom shape, enough so to be especially becoming, and is trimmed with a band either of matching or of contrasting silk. This hat may be had in primrose, black, blue, natural, and really almost every other shade of straw.

A light-weight material so new that it has no name is used for this cleverly cut, medium-length top-coat. Coat, $29.50; hat, $13.75

For $12.75, this beach coat of an excellent quality of light-weight golfine is developed in colors either somber or gay. Hat, $3.95

Like the smart frocks of the season this quaint, taffeta bathing suit is ruffled three times on the skirt. Suit, $14.50; cap, $2.95

The bathing suits are pretty this season, and, like the gowns of the summer, are ruffled and puffed. The quaint bathing costume illustrated on this page is available in either blue or black taffeta, piped in white or in such colors as green or rose. The scallops on the three ruffles are repeated on the sleeves, and the little round neck is piped.

With the bathing suit is worn one of the charming new bathing caps of rubber, and it is time that we had pretty rubber caps, for we suffered the ugly ones for so long. This one is aptly called the Omar, and it is indeed similar in appearance to the head-dress which the much-pictured Omar Khayyam is credited with having worn. It is of blue, rose, navy blue, or black rubber, and is trimmed with a most natural-looking, rubber rose. It comes packed in a charming little flowered bandbox.

FROCKS AS SUMMERY AS THEY LOOK

The much-ruffled frock illustrated second at the bottom of page 64 is as summery as it looks. It is of a dainty, flowered dimity or voile, and is simply trimmed about the neck with a fichu-like ruffle of a pretty embroidered, cross-bar batiste, just as sheer and fine as it can be. The girdle is of soft satin of an excellent quality, and repeats one of the tones in the pattern of the material. It is not often that one finds an inexpensive frock that is so well made and in which such care is given to details.

The dainty little short-brimmed sailor shown with this frock is of hemp in the natural leghorn color. It is prettily trimmed with a wreath of garden flowers and a moire ribbon in any desired color. It is a charming little hat, quaint but decidedly wearable.

Copied line for line and stitch for stitch from a much higher priced imported model is this handkerchief linen blouse for $3.95 buttons. A ruffle of fine shadow lace trims the neck and sleeves of the jacket, and the belt is of dark blue velvet.

JAPANESE KIMONOS FROM JAPAN

A kimono for summer wear is shown at the right of this page. It is of cotton crêpe of the Japanese variety which is so strong and wears so well that constant washing even seems to soften it. It is prettily hand-embroidered in roses, wistaria, cherry blossoms, or chrysanthemums on a foundation of pink, blue, heliotrope, or white crêpe. The embroidery is done in white thread.

Quite an attractive novelty for either men or women is a cotton crêpe robe shown by the same shop. It is of the fine, white, Japanese material called grass crêpe, and is striped in any color with fine lines about an inch apart. The robe is cut with long sleeves and is exactly like the plain, straight kimonos that the men and women wear in both China and Japan. It has a plain, straight, narrow belt of the material attached at the back. Nothing could be more comfortable or suitable for summer kimonos than grass crêpe, as it washes easily and the colors do not fade. It is priced $3.50.

Yokohama, and so is able to send things to America without the usual expenses incurred in dealing with a middleman. The kimono sketched is of an excellent quality of China silk, and may be had beautifully hand-embroidered in any of a variety of designs and in self or contrasting shade. It has pretty winged sleeves and a fringed sash. It is silk-lined in either a self tone or contrasting shade, and is finished with a roll at the bottom which is very soft and graceful.

A mandarin coat of oriental chiffon is another novelty shown at this shop. It is finely embroidered by hand in soft silk and may be had in lovely colors. It would make a charming negligee if worn over a slip. It is priced at $6.50.

COPIES OF IMPORTED BLOUSES

The very prettiest of the new blouses are copies of the most successful French blouses that have been imported in large numbers during the last month or so. Many times these copies are deceptively perfect and the materials are the exact counterparts of the originals, but, because made by machine and minus the importing duty, they cost oftentimes but a fraction of the cost of the original models.

One of the most popular blouses of the season, of which was originally a month or so ago—extremely high for the average purse, has been faithfully copied and is shown at the upper left of this page. It may be had in white or almost

and Short Journeys, Which, End Where
They May, Begin at the Dressmaker's

THE spring season is one of many short journeys or week-end trips which make decided demands upon the wardrobe. In the April 15 issue there was suggested in this department an economical policy for the wardrobe in which was emphasized the importance of buying one good suit and dress each season. If neither of the models sketched with the former article were chosen, it is suggested that the ideas illustrated in those shown here may be adopted, or that the models may be copied exactly by an inexpensive tailor.

AN AROUND-THE-CLOCK WARDROBE

Besides a good suit the other essentials of a well-planned wardrobe are a dark afternoon gown of taffeta which may be worn on the street and yet is suitable for wear at luncheons; a hat such as the Empire model sketched at the upper right, one that can be worn equally well with a suit, a taffeta frock, or a more elaborate dress; a formal afternoon gown of flowered silk for wear with a suitable hat at weddings and receptions; a light colored crêpe de Chine or white taffeta dress for informal dinner wear; at least two evening dresses; and a cape appropriate for both afternoon and evening wear. For such a cape the material should be taffeta, satin, or one of the French novelty cloths similar to côte de cheval which come in delightful ribbed effects.

To complete this wardrobe lingerie waists of the new type, a chiffon blouse, a sufficient amount of pretty underwear, a negligee, a tea-gown, plain calfskin walking pumps, a pair of white and a pair of black satin slippers, and several pairs of gloves should be added. A more economical way of achieving variety than by adding to these types of gowns or doubling on them is to buy only one new dress of each sort and to remodel those of last season. The illustrations in this article were selected with this double purpose in mind, and may be used either as suggestions for the developing of new gowns or for the remodeling of old ones.

Many women who are clever enough to have their clothes cut on lines that are becoming fail to consider the vast difference that colors and materials make. These things often, however, determine the date of a gown more certainly than anything else. For instance, the net frill spells last season, the stiffened organdy collar this; bright, plain trimming, last spring, Roman stripes this. But as alterations of trimmings and collars can be made at small cost, it is in just such ways as this that a woman with limited means should refresh her costumes.

Here the old order is reversed and a taffeta suit is trimmed with serge—if an underskirt may be called a trimming

DISGUIISING THE DATE OF A SUIT

The lower of the two sketched suits shows a cloth skirt of one of the new Cal-lot checks in blue and mustard, with a jacket of dark blue serge. For trimming, the checked material or a mustard colored cloth embroidered in blue might be used. This model suggests an excellent means of remodeling a suit, as the front and neck of the suit could be cut away, and a collar like the one shown on this suit substituted. Cuffs like those on this suit might be cut from the pieces of the coat cut away from the neck, and the long tail sections might be copied if the cut of the old coat allows it.

The second suit sketched also shows possibilities for remodeling an old suit.

This flower-trimmed, black straw hat, though severe enough to be worn with a suit, is also charming with a dress

The addition to an old serge skirt of a long taffeta tunic of the sort illustrated would bring it up to date. A new jacket with vest and cuffs of striped silk and a collar of the cloth of the skirt could be made of taffeta to match the tunic. In this way much can be done without a great deal of expense. Moreover, the Eton jacket, especially if of taffeta, which is easier to handle than cloth, is not difficult to make.

THE TRANSFORMING POWER OF RUFFLES

If there is on hand a last season's dark crêpe gown with a waist of kimono cut, it could be remade this season by substituting a new collar and vest of white book muslin for the old neck finishing. Taffeta ruffles of the same color as the skirt might be applied effectively, as shown in the photograph at the lower left-hand corner of the page. The ruffles might be set on the skirt all the way around; or they might be placed on the skirt itself only in front and at the sides, and then run onto a short, half tunic of chiffon in the back. On the left side the ruffles drop and cross the back where they confine the back drapery. The half tunic is very good and suggests many methods of renovation. The way of using the buttons right up the back of the waist and tunic is also worthy of imitation.

AN AROUND-THE-CLOCK HAT

Particularly good with dresses of this sort is the black straw, Empire-shaped hat sketched at the upper right-hand corner. Although it can be worn with a suit, its severity is sufficiently relieved by the flowers to make it suitable for wear with a dress. The trimming of such a hat requires little skill; indeed, a shape of this kind can be found in almost any millinery department and trimmed at home without great expense.

The gowns illustrated on the following page, chosen for their simplicity, show innovations which the French designers launched this spring. The drooping shoulder-line, and the deep collar which have been intimated by this house before are now introduced in a pronounced form. It is in the line of the skirt, however, that a real difference from former models is found, for unlike that of some of the other makers, the fulness of the Paquin skirt is toward the bottom instead of at the hips. For the model on the right, one of the new taffetas with gay flowers on a blue ground would be effective. Bands of a solid dark color and a chemisette and collar of organdy or sparsely figured lace would be a foil for the floweriness.

A PEPLUM PARALLELS A COLLAR-LINE

The novelty of the waist of this dress is in the attractive cape or deep collar of lace which hangs to the waist-line in the back, and is accented by a peplum of the same shape made of the lace. The very simple skirt is caught into a low puff on either side and fastened by a bow of the plain material. This shortens the skirt and allows it to drop longer in the front and back than on the sides, thus giving the uneven skirt-line which is frequently found in the spring frocks. This arrangement also gives greater width to the skirt as the sides flare out in circular fashion. A straight, long skirt of last season could be altered to give this effect by the addition of a foundation of china silk upon which the skirt itself could be draped. Should the skirt be too short to be draped otherwise, a straight band of plain, self-tone material may be attached to the foundation to form an underskirt.

THE QUAINTNESS OF 1914

The old-fashioned quality which is noticeable in so many of the spring clothes is seen in the model at the left of the page. The trimming drops off the shoulders and exposes a transparent yoke of lace which falls to the top of the belt in the back. This dress would be lovely of white taffeta combined with tango taffeta or velvet. The material chosen, of course, must depend upon what sort of wear will be required of the dress. If made of white taffeta, without the guimpe, it could be used as a dinner dress now, and later, it could be worn with the guimpe at such formal afternoon occasions as weddings in the country. The skirt, puffed at the sides below the knee, is trimmed by two short ruffles which reach to the top of the side slashings which are filled in with lace. This arrangement leaves a point of taffeta in the front and one in the back, while the lace allows the necessary fullness for dancing without making a too bouffant foot-line.

MOSTLY AIRINESS

The evening gown sketched at the lower part of the page is delightful for summer wear as it has great delicacy and airiness. The only really substantial thing about it is the pale blue satin skirt which hangs in straight lines with a deep slash at each side to reveal an eighteen-inch frill of lace. Over the entire length of the skirt falls a net overskirt, which on a blue dress might be rose colored to match a girdle embroidered with roses.

The waist, which is cut daringly low in the back, is chiefly an airy bit of tulle combined with transparent lace. The sleeves are straight pieces of white silk net draped on the shoulders and caught at the underarm and at the girdle. To complete the effect of airiness two full, gathered ruffles of silk net form the tunic. Such a treatment gives a quaint, high-waisted effect that is especially charming for a tall, slender person. The gown, if made without the ruffles, however, would suit the less slender figure admirably.

THE WRAP OF MANIFOLD USES

One of the pleasures resulting from an unlimited dress allowance is to have every sort of wrap—and one of the satisfactions of a limited income is to be clever enough to find a wrap which suits many kinds of uses equally well. The one illustrated on this page does this, for it can be readily converted from a wrap of somber hued cloth to one of gay satin by the simple expedient of turning it inside out. The cape is made of two materials, the dark one to be worn out for afternoon, and the light satin side to be turned out for evening wear. The puff is merely buttoned in place, and there is no troublesome adjustment. The cape is cut in one piece and is slightly circular as it is naturally narrower at the top than at the bottom. The neck is finished by a wide collar, which may match the satin or be in contrast with it as desired.

It is very important, however, in a double-faced cape of this sort to choose the materials and colors with great care. Côte de cheval is as supple as charmeuse, and can be had in rich, deep shades. A soft brown or green cloth combined with apricot satin would be lovely for the wrap described; also, a deep maroon cloth with pale pink satin would be charming. A pattern of this cape can be supplied for $1.50, with the help of which the cape could be easily and successfully made. Patterns for all the models in this department are cut at a special price of $1 each for waist or skirt, $1.50 for a three-quarter-length garment, and $2 for a complete costume.

THE STRONGHOLD of CONSERVATISM

THE National Academy of Design, with more deceased academicians than living ones upon its roster, may now be said to be a full-fledged institution. Its last exhibition, the eighty-ninth, was a very characteristic one, and to say this is to give high praise at the present day. The spirit of unrest existing everywhere has been made plain by daily incidents and daily papers. We live surrounded by iconoclasts who fire shots at all our institutions—religious, political, social, financial, and artistic. There are ropes around the necks of the most beloved gods, and only time will show whether the ropes will break or the gods bend.

Standing alone, the National Academy of Design, apparently unharassed, certainly unharmed, continues, in contempt of all outside influences or blind to them, to preach a theory born with its first breath. Here again does the Academy prove itself a real institution, for it has remained gloriously true to the fundamental principle of institutions, and walked forward with its eyes to the rear or blindfolded. If the faculty of doing this proves nothing else, it certainly proves the possession of a very steady set of legs, or of a very firm foundation. Almost any weak-legged independent under the same circumstances, instead of crushing the obstacles in his path, would trip over them and tumble. Indeed, the independents of the present moment have fallen to the ground over an importation.

WITH OFFENSE TO NONE

There were three hundred and ninety-six works in the exhibition, twenty of which were sculptures so small and so isolated that one passed them by unseeing. The pictures, on the other hand, were shown admirably. George Bellows commanded them from the place of honor with a big, full-length canvas of majestic design, which won for him the Isaac N. Maynard Prize. The work commanded them with, perhaps, a little brutality, but its strength was desirable and obvious. Elsewhere, through the galleries, one found strength but rarely, and then hidden in a maze of subtleties. The American painter has learned—shall we say over-learned?—the value of diplomacy. He says as little as possible or nothing, and he never employs emphasis. At Paris salons, when one becomes tired of painting as painting, one may listen to the stories the pictures recount. They go back with the historians to the days of valor, of splendor, and of broken heads, or present with the litterateurs the problems of every-day life. But here there is not this alternative unless, of course, one is old enough or brave enough, to view the old-fashioned story that exists in the work of E. L. Henry—"Election Day," this time—or so old a problem in our life as that of negro blood, painted plainly enough in Harry W. Watrous's "The Drop Sinister (What Shall We Do with It?)." These two pictures, no matter if they are old-fashioned, show an interest in life that here, where all eyes and hands are turned to craftsmanship, is very laudable. And they are not bad in craftsmanship, though they present nature humbly, without the customary selection and omission. With the painters of the Pennsylvania School, with men like Redfield, Symons, Rosen, Schofield, and Spencer, omission is carried to a point where, while we are accorded some of the length and breadth and bigness of our landscape, we miss a great deal of its wealth.

CHOOSING A SUBJECT FOR LIFE

Robert Spencer's "The White Tenement," painted very ably, was awarded the Inness Gold Medal. Like Henner, with his thousand white nudes, or Thaulow and Ziem with their respective thousands of running streams and Venetian canals, Spencer has become aware of the value of dwelling continually and consistently upon one subject. But the members of the Pennsylvania coterie have all studied this lesson, whether they paint old brick buildings and incidental people, or roads or streams winding through a country which under a covering of snow becomes only the more bare and poor. Next to the officially commended work of Spencer, was shown another prize picture, Jonas Lie's "Afterglow," which won the First Hallgarten Prize. This shows the New York water-front in yellows and oranges, blues and purples that are rather more sensational than true.

E. W. Redfield showed "Below the Island" and "The City at Night"—a blue robe studded with twinkling jewels—a subject that until this year we have not seen from his brush since the time when he began to carry home as loot all the art prizes in the republic. Gardner Symons in "Winter Evening" and Ben Foster in "The Connecticut Hills," shown together, made an interesting contrast of atmospheres—one cold, hard, almost bitter, the other soft, mellow, almost liquid. The exhibition needed more such contrasts to lend it animation.

"Midsummer," awarded the Second Hallgarten Prize. This was in a vein of less depth, but was, nevertheless, enchanting. Mr. Bredin's early promise is at last reaching fulfillment. He mingles, in this picture, romance with dignity, sincerity with gaiety. We are beginning, though slowly, to value decorative line in easel pictures. Bertram C. Hartman employed it admirably in his "Two Natures"—a boat gliding past silent hills on a silent river—which was one of the most delightful contributions to the collection, and unique in both color and composition.

THE BEATEN PATH

As though following in the wake of modern architects, the landscapists who showed houses on the countryside showed, almost invariably, white ones with green blinds. This was true of Everett L. Warner's "The Guardian Elm," Harry L. Hoffman's "A Mood of Spring," and Ernest Lawson's intimate and colorful "Old Tulip Tree"—to mention only the three most striking examples.

In no special instance in the exhibition were the figure painters more entertaining than the landscape painters. Varian E. Cockroft's "Arrangement" and "Girl Reading," as exceptions to the general

SHADOWS of FAIRYLAND and FICTION

Pictures copyrighted by Mary Hamilton Frye

From the abject despair of Gretel in the clutch of the crooked-nosed witch, the youth of the little Lord Fauntleroy, the solid comfort of Bottom under the ministrations of Titania's pointed fingers, the weary grace of Rosalind prodding the Forester, to the expansion of Scrooge's soul within his skimpy coat, nothing is too airily insubstantial or too material for the magic outlines of these shadows

Puck with nonchalant abandon laughs into the face of a giant dragon-fly that descends like the outspread heavens upon him, and lithely leaps away to pursue with serious countenance and eager feet his pranks through field and forest and among animated flowers and leaves. No color, no words could better give the swift spirit of his play than do these sharp and graceful outlines of his sprightly body

WHATEVER beauty and vivid character artists of earlier centuries were able to put into their carefully wrought silhouettes, it remained for a woman of our own day, Mary Hamilton Frye, to discover that these dainty shadows are the ideal medium by which to catch the elusive characters of fairyland and fiction. She touches her pencil or pen to her paper and brings into existence a host of charming subjects, familiar yet more charming in this new guise, and with them comes a genuine whiff of wonderland where even ugliness is not oppressive. The sprightly spirits of the elves she detains for a moment, yet never seems to injure or confine them in her animated outlines.

AN ARTIST OF SIX YEARS

It was when she was still a small child living in fairyland herself that Miss Frye began this work. She told tales to herself with her brush when she was only six years old, and as she grew older and learned better the secrets of the world of magic she told to others the curious and delightful stories she had found out. Her silhouettes, cleverly worked out fancies, are used for illustrations of books and for making transparencies. In her pictures for "The Blue Bird" and for "A Midsummer Night's Dream" her little "shades" have such a spirit of fairyland that they whisk one quite out of the real world. Many of her illustrations have been made to describe the wonderful adventures of "Nils," the little Scandinavian lad who was turned into a real elf.

In her interpretations of Shakespeare's plays this artist depicts the poet's odd, whimsical characters delightfully in black and white, and his elves and fairies with charming lightness and grace. So vivid are her representations, one almost hears the tinkling of the Canterbury Bells calling the fairy host, and sees them flitting, prancing, gliding over the tree tops and toadstools, hiding in the petals of roses, drinking the dew from Arethusa, and piping a merry tune on the horns of the honeysuckle blossom.

ACROSS THE BOUNDARIES OF THE ACTUAL

Few people live in fairyland as does Miss Frye, but she carries every one with her across the boundaries of the actual world into this other half-forgotten one. It might almost be said that she sleeps in a thistle and is wakened by the piper piping to the fairies to come and dance in the toadstool forest where the rose queen beckons them with the scent of a white rose, and jonquil comes hurrying along with his little brother to join the fun. Her fairies dance in the moonlight, flit in and out among the cattails and the branches of the trees, and swing upon the flowers. Yet not all of the stories which she tells with her brush are of fairies; not all of her thoughts are fantasies. Many of her illustrations are marked by soberness and every-day detail, those, for instance, which she has done for the tales of Dickens.

While still at the art school, Miss Frye attracted the attention of Maxfield Parrish, who did much to encourage her and to interest others in her type of work. It was when she saw in silhouettes the possibilities of giving people enjoyment by putting stories upon white walls in clear black and white that she set her many peopled world of "shades" in motion. Her subjects appeal to both young and old; they go into the hospitals to cheer the little ones, and they are found in many modern homes where grown folks enjoy watching the antics of the fairies as much as do the children.

IF Shakespeare were merely a poet, it would be possible to agree with Charles Lamb that it is better to read his plays in the library than to see them in the theatre; but, despite the enormous literary reputation which has been heaped upon him posthumously, and which by his sheer ability to write he undeniably deserves, Shakespeare was first and last and all the time a playwright. He wrote his plays to entertain the theatre-going public of Elizabethan London, and the only sound reason for producing them three hundred and fifty years after his birth is that they are capable of entertaining the theatre-going public of to-day.

It is a fallacy to assume that the public ought to patronize Shakespearean revivals from a sense of duty. The only right reason for going to the theatre is to have a good time, in one way or another; and anybody who produces Shakespeare assumes the burden of proving that Shakespeare is still able to give the public a good time. If a representative audience that has paid its money to see "The Taming of the Shrew" subsequently compares the piece unfavorably with "Seven Keys to Baldpate," the fault must be charged not so much to the audience as to the producing manager. If Shakespeare's farce is not as funny as Mr. Cohan's, it ought not to have been produced in competition with it; and if it is as funny, the producing manager should have made this fact evident to the audience. It is never a duty to laugh.

The only way to keep Shakespeare alive in the theatre is to keep demonstrating that he is alive. His plays must be treated frankly as entertainments, and they must be made to compete successfully against vaudeville and motion-pictures, just as in their own day they competed successfully against bear-baitings and cock-fights. The public should never be made to feel that in seeing Shakespeare it is being bored, in the fancied interest of education; for, in education as in life, as Stevenson has said, "to miss the joy is to miss all." To see a play of Shakespeare's without enjoying it is not to add to one's culture but, in an important detail, to subtract from it—since one has derived a false impression that Shakespeare is dull.

This simple point, which is very often missed in the contemporary theatre, and which was notably ignored in Mr. Charles Frohman's production of "Much Ado about Nothing" last September, is triumphantly illustrated by Miss Margaret Anglin's revivals of "The Taming of the Shrew," "As You Like It," and "Twelfth Night." The most impressive feature of these performances is that they obviously give the public a good time. At Miss Anglin's production of the "Shrew," the audience laughs as heartily and as continuously as at any recent farce of Mr. Cohan's. This is as it should be. If this play is worth seeing now, it is not for the recondite reason that it was written by the greatest of English poets, but merely because it is worth seeing now. If Miss Anglin has taught the public nothing else about Shakespeare, she has at least taught it the very important lesson that his comedies are comedies; and in doing this she has displayed consummate common sense.

MISS ANGLIN'S SHAKESPEARIAN PRODUCTIONS

BOTH by virtue of her native talents and by reason of her broad experience, Miss Margaret Anglin is one of the most accomplished actresses on the American stage to-day. Heretofore she has achieved her chief successes in playing the tearful heroines of modern social drama and the sprightly heroines of modern social comedy. It is natural that, at the present stage of her career, she should desire to act the classic rôles of Rosalind and Viola and Katharine, in which her comic gift and her emotional gift are called simultaneously into exercise. Yet it is evident from the entire atmosphere of her productions that she is more interested in giving the public an opportunity to see Shakespeare than to see Miss Anglin. The comedies of Shakespeare are not "star" plays, and Miss Anglin does not "star" herself in any of them. Her stage-direction never calls attention to herself at the expense of any other member of her company, and the applause of the audience is graciously received as a tribute to the troupe as a whole. This troupe is by far the best that has been assembled for this type of work since Augustin Daly's company was dissolved. There is not a bad actor in the entire aggregation, and there is not a noticeably bad performance of any of the fifty-six parts in these three comedies. The importance of this fact may easily be estimated by anybody who suffered from the harrowing "support" that was accorded to Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in his recent Shakespearean revivals.

Among the performances that may be singled out for special praise are those of Pedro de Cordoba as Orlando and Orsino, Fuller Mellish as Jacques and Malvolio, Eric Blind as Petruchio, Sidney Greenstreet as Sir Toby Belch, Max Montesole as Grumio, and Ruth Holt Boucicault as Celia; but the special merit of this company is revealed not so much in individual performances as in the team-play of the entire troupe. This team-play, which is so rare on the contemporary stage, is best exhibited in "The Taming of the Shrew." There is not a dull moment in the performance of this entire play. All the actors are kept busy all the time, and the action is enlivened in every incident with interesting by-play. In rehearsing this piece alone, Miss Anglin has proved herself to be a stage-director of extraordinary ability. It must have been a gigantic task to work out every detail of the "business" of all three comedies during the course of a single season; and it seems probable that Miss Anglin's own performances will grow richer and riper after she has had leisure to recuperate from her initial labors as director.

In all three of her parts, Miss Anglin appears to better advantage in the comic than in the lyric passages. For this reason, her best performance is in the rôle of Katharine. It is unnecessary to record that she never approaches the imperious performance of Ada Rehan—the one incomparable Katharine of modern times; but she shows us a woman who is very humanly and very comically stubborn. Her Rosalind is labored in the first two acts, but witty and ingratiating afterwards; and her Viola, though diverting in the comic passages, seems to lack the necessary note of wistfulness in the poetic scenes.

ONE FAULT IN MANY VIRTUES

Miss Anglin's one great fault in the performance of these parts is her tendency to sing the lines instead of speak them. She intones the lyric passages with a conscious tremolo, and slides her voice capriciously upwards or downwards several notes in pitch while reading a single sentence; and it is evident that this is done deliberately, in an endeavor to call attention to the fact that Shakespeare has set his words together in a marked musical sequence. It is necessary to disagree with Miss Anglin in her theory of elocution. Once, when Tennyson was asked how he wished his verses to be read, he replied, "Precisely as you would read the morning paper." Whenever a sentence is well written, either in verse or in prose, it will sound alluring to the ear if it is read in the simplest manner possible. It is not at all necessary to sing such a phrase as "perilous seas in faery lands forlorn" in order to call attention to the fact that the phrase is rich in music. Keats has already done his work, and all that is required of the reader is to pronounce every syllable distinctly as it comes. The verse of Shakespeare should be read precisely like the prose of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, and there is no more reason for singing the lines of Viola than for singing those of Mrs. Dane. When Miss Anglin comes to realize this simple point—as an artist of her acute intelligence is sure to do—her performance of Shakespeare's lyric heroines will be considerably improved.

At present she reads the lines of Katharine with simplicity and eloquence until she comes to the long speech at the conclusion of the play; and then she ruins this with artificiality. She sings the first two acts of "As You Like It," and then ascends to natural and human speech as the part takes possession of her. In "Twelfth Night" she artificially intones the lyric passages, but speaks the comic lines with a reasonable sense that they were intended to be natural. The only reason why this fault of singing has been emphasized in the present context is, first, that it is easy to correct, and, second, that it is an error to which contemporary actors seem particularly prone. The merits of Miss Anglin's performances

Miss Margaret Anglin, who proves "The Taming of the Shrew" is still a modern farce and Shakespeare most alive when not awesomely remembered

If in "Too Many Cooks" love be the broth, Miss Inez Plummer offers for it ingredients so winsome it is easy to believe it can not be spoiled of these three important parts are sufficient to outweigh this one deficiency.

A point that has often been ignored in Shakespearian revivals is that the Elizabethan playwright planned his plays to be enacted on a stage that was practically unencumbered with scenery, and intended his incidents to be run off in immediate succession. We have every reason to believe that plays were presented at the Globe Theatre without any intermission whatsoever. Our contemporary social custom requires us to establish two or three intermissions to allow the male members of the audience to stretch their legs in the lobby and smoke a meditative cigarette; but any unnecessary intermission between the hurrying scenes of an Elizabethan act tends to rob the narrative of its essential note of continuity. Miss Anglin has devoted particular attention to this point. The longest intermission in her three productions—except for arbitrary waits between the acts—is only fifty-three seconds, and, in most cases, a change of scene is accomplished in less than half a minute. The psychological effect of this rapidity in running off the narrative contributes greatly to that sense of continuity which is necessary to the fullest enjoyment of an Elizabethan play.

MISS ANGLIN AS STAGE-MANAGER

This brings us to a consideration of the most important merit of Miss Anglin's Shakespearian productions—namely, the method of their scenical investiture. This method exhibits an exceedingly sensible compromise between the nineteenth century method of Augustin Daly and Sir Henry Irving and the sixteenth century method of Shakespeare himself. Miss Anglin has made a liberal use of the Elizabethan distinction between the fore-stage and the full-stage. In all three of her productions, there are arched entrances at either side of the proscenium which correspond with the two established doors of the Elizabethan stage, and these entrances remain unchanged throughout the action. Whenever an incident is to be enacted on the fore-stage, an arras is let down, and the actors play their part before a background of appropriate tapestry. The full-stage is set with scenery, but this is simple and suggestive.

Miss Irene Fenwick carries the title rôle in "Along Came Ruth" with that exceeding skill which is always acclaimed "natural"

The scenery and costumes for all three productions were designed by Mr. Livingston Platt; and his work gives evidence of an artistic talent of extraordinary competence. He seems able, without apparent effort, to achieve the maximum of effect with the minimum of means. His sets are very beautiful and very simple. He paints with an unusually gentle palette. In the forest scenes of "As You Like It," the costumes of the characters are all designed in tints that are common in autumnal leaves, so that the actors seem indeed to be citizens of Arden instead of intruders among the leisurely and meditative trees. In his settings for "The Taming of the Shrew," he suggests the gorgeous richness of the Renaissance in scenery so light in structure that it may be shifted in ten seconds and could be packed without damage in a traveling trunk. But Mr. Platt's imagination is revealed most emphatically in his investiture of "Twelfth Night." He has made a clear distinction between the lyrical scenes that happen in a fanciful Illyria and the broadly comic scenes that happen frankly in Elizabethan England. Orsino's palace is fantastically oriental; Olivia's garden suggests some imaginative nook on the Dalmatian coast; but the kitchen which Sir Toby and Maria and Sir Andrew and Festé incubate their plot against Malvolio is utterly English and Elizabethan. Sir Toby is dressed in Elizabethan clothes, and Orsino is dressed as an oriental potentate; and this discrepancy is demanded by the text.

A NEW STAR AMONG SCENIC ARTISTS

The scenes in Orsino's palace are lighted solely from the top and from the sides; and, in setting nearly all of the poetic passages of these three comedies, Mr. Platt has chosen to suppress the footlights. By this device he has succeeded in haunting the stage with sudden and mysterious shadows which contribute to the necessary note of unreality which should be felt in watching these fantastic incidents. It has been reported that Mr. Platt has spent several years in Europe, studying the theatrical devices of such producers as Professor Max Reinhardt and Mr. Gordon Craig. From whatever source his inspiration may have been derived, it must be emphatically stated that he has shown us, in his investiture of these three comedies, the proper method for decorating Shakespearian productions at the present time. His scenery never gets in the way of the actors or the story; it never reduces the narrative from the realm of imagination to the realm of actuality; it is beautiful without ostentation and rich without extravagance; and it is so simple in construction that it may be shifted in the winking of an eye. On the basis of these three endeavors, the advent of Mr. Livingston Platt as a scenic artist is an important acquisition to our stage.

"A PAIR OF SIXES"

HERETOFORE Mr. Edward Peple has written mainly in the mood of tender sentiment, and it seems a little surprising that his latest play should be a hurrying, headlong farce of the type that has become associated with the name of George M. Cohan. But Mr. Peple has not only changed his manner in "A Pair of Sixes"; he has also increased his craftsmanship. The piece is admirably planned, and the effect is so unfalteringly entertaining from the outset to the end that it hardly seems that Mr. Cohan himself could have distilled more fun from the material.

"A Pair of Sixes" is excellently acted, and the company has been cleverly rehearsed by Edgar MacGregor. The first act is played in the extremely rapid tempo which Mr. Cohan employed in directing the opening act of "Get-Quick-Rich Wallingford," and the sense of

Frocks of Silk and Crêpe for the Girl Graduate, and Others of the Same Materials but Different Cut for All Sorts of Summer Occasions

Nos. 2577/10-2578/10

Simplicity, the prime factor of charm in a graduation dress, is attained in crêpe de Chine and lace

THE graduation dress is one that good taste demands shall be very simple. It may be of some soft, clinging material in an ivory tone, when it may be trimmed with lace of a deeper shade. There are very many different shades of white; and these should be carefully considered, and the shade of the lace trimming should harmonize with the shade of the frock.

Such a model as Nos. 2577/10-2578-10 is particularly well suited for a graduation dress. It combines the very latest designs of tunic, collar, and girdle, and still retains a charming simplicity. Made of crêpe de Chine or chiffon voile, trimmed with cream lace, and girdled with moire, satin, or taffeta, it would be a frock of distinction. Nos. 2422/10-2423/10 form another model that is especially suited to the young graduate. Should soft cream taffeta be used, it would be most effective with a tunic and ruffles of cream net and a girdle and vest of a contrasting color or material.

Nos. 2475/10-2476/10 feature the lace petticoat and show one of the new bustle effects. This model is most attractive when made of either pompadour crêpe or taffeta with a petticoat of lace, or of plaited silk ruffled like that which trims the sleeves. A modish touch may be given by cording the ruffle edges.

The patterns shown on this page are in sizes 34 to 40 inch bust measure, except pattern Nos. 2577/10-2578/10, which also comes in 16 or 18 year old sizes; price, 50 cents each for waist or skirt. Order from The Vogue Pattern Service, 443 Fourth Ave., cor. 30th St., N. Y.

Nos. 2574/10-2575/10

Surplice guimpe with wired collar, the popular organdy vest and collar, and the Gladstone collar and vest of the moment, 50 cents for the three

SUCH a pattern as No. 2518/10, which includes three different collars and vests, can be used most advantageously with a blouse pattern like No. 2556/10, should the blouse be made of crêpe de Chine, or one of the new cotton materials. The separate vest or bolero is easily adjusted and freshens a costume most effectively.

No. 2569/10

Sports skirt not in name only, but with width enough for sports

Such a suit as Nos. 2473/10-2474/10 is especially good looking if made of one of the new silk oriental suitings, and worn with a blouse like No. 2519/10, which can be made of the suit material with the vest and collar of lace or organdy. The vest should be made so that it may be easily adjusted and easily laundered; simpler vests might be kept for emergency.

PATTERNS for the YOUNG MAID and the SMALL MAN

THE lingerie frock is noticeably changed; instead of dresses of embroidered batiste with Irish or Cluny lace insertion, we now have charming frocks of cotton voile, crêpe, ratine, or net. These, especially when they are made for young girls, are trimmed with ribbons or with silk in gay Roman stripes or plaids.

Such a frock as Nos. 2537/10-2538/10 represent, would be particularly pretty made of plain cotton voile combined with a voile figured in brocaded effect with tiny rosebuds or with sprays of flowers. The girdle might be made of taffeta silk or ribbon to match the color of the blossoms.

Nos. 2571/10-2572/10 form a frock distinctly designed for service. The skirt is well cut and hung, and has sufficient width for a walk or game. The blouse, which has a peplum, a set-in sleeve, and a low rolling collar, fastens down the back with buttons that are easily found. For natural linen trimmed with rows of white soutache braid, this model is a very desirable one.

Nos. 2529/10-2530/10 would be very effective made of net with the bodice and lower pannier ruffle of embroidered net and the girdle and sash of Roman striped silk. Such a frock would be in good

No. 2576/10 is an unusually good model which lends itself to development in many materials. Made of non-shrinkable flannel, striped or plaid for the skirt and plain for the blouse, with the plaid used for the collar and cuffs, it is a becoming and useful frock.

The new calico-patterned linens, as well as the bright colored linens, make charming smocks. Linen in Chinese blue with white organdy collar and cuffs would combine successfully for model No. 2534/10.

Nos. 2459/10, 2562-10, 2460/10 are different versions of the much admired David Copperfield suit for little boys. No. 2459/10 is a picturesque and sprightly costume with its beruffled blouse and straight little two-seamed trousers. WHAT THEY SAY

PRINCETON can not get along without a bard, it seems. Now that Henry Van Dyke is representing his country in Holland, Alfred Noyes is coming to lecture on modern English literature. Princeton has offered him a visiting professorship, and he has accepted the offer for a part of each year. He is only thirty-two years old but he has written a prodigious amount of poetry, and poetry that has paid him well, too. He has been writing for twenty years, but did not devote himself entirely to his art until after he left Oxford. He and his poems have had a warm welcome in this country. Any city dweller who has had his soul rasped by wandering street organs should get a copy of Alfred Noyes's poem, "The Barrel Organ," wherein he sings of the

"... barrel organ carolling across the golden street,
In the City as the sun sinks low."

COACHING A QUEEN

America is about to be visited by a regularly crowned queen, a matter of moment to the uncrowned millions here, because it will be the first visit of a sovereign to our shores. King Ferdinand and Queen Eleanora of Bulgaria have long been interested in the United States, and their interest has been deepened by association with the American doctors who had charge of Bulgarian hospitals during the war. The Queen comes without the King in order to avoid possible diplomatic embarrassments that a visit from a reigning monarch might entail. The Queen and her suite will spend several weeks in this country, and her Majesty hopes to learn much that will be of value to Bulgaria. She is particularly interested in social and economic problems, and is eager to learn about our methods of meeting them. Bulgaria has no insignificant problem on her hands in dealing with the two hundred thousand Rumanian, Servian, and Grecian refugees thrust upon her by the exigencies of war. The future of the Bulgars looks hopeful, indeed, when their Queen is willing to journey into the new world and to sit at the feet of a progressive people in their behalf.

YALE TURNS THE TANGO DOWN

While the rest of the world has been tangoing itself into happiness, Yale has given dancing a back hand slap. In a recent vote taken by the senior class as to the favorite amusement, only twelve votes out of one hundred and seventy-four were cast for dancing. The theatre led with eighty-four, the "movies" received nineteen votes; reading, seventeen; bridge, thirteen; tennis, twelve; golf, eight; and motoring, nine. Thus do young college men seriously discuss their pleasures, while others are heedlessly "tripping the light fantastic toe."

TO BE TAKEN WITH A GRAIN OF SALT

Skating on thin ice has long been a more or less hazardous pastime, but after this, if we follow the lead of the Germans, we can take our skating with a grain of salt. A salt skating-rink was operated in Berlin during the early spring, and was, apparently, very successful. The smooth, saline, crystalline mass has the advantages of comparative cheapness and of portability. When the temperature does not exceed eighty-six degrees Fahrenheit, a board floor can be set up anywhere, coated to imitate ice, and skating may proceed at once. Skating may now become a profitable and popular sport on chilly days in August. Who knows?

LISTEN TO THE LION ROAR

The appointment of Mr. Henry W. Thornton of New York to be general manager of the Great Eastern Railway in England seems to have caused a tempest in a teapot. No one objects to the American, but every one objects to the statement of Lord Claud Hamilton, chairman of the road, that he had to import a man owing to the scarcity of British talent. That was enough to make the lion roar. "Forty-five million people, and not one capable of managing the Great Eastern!" roared he. Bernard Shaw stepped amiably into the controversy with the remark that the English are a dull people who have won success only through Jewish, Irish, or German brains and are now drawing on America.

However true this may be, Mr. Thornton, who has been manager of the Long Island Railroad with its forty million suburban passengers a year, goes well equipped to take care of the hundred million who travel on the Great Eastern each year. All he asks for himself is British fair play and a chance to make good.

FACING THE HINDOO

The country is facing a new peril, but facing perils has become so frequent that we do the facing with a calm spirit. This time it is a Hindoo invasion that perils us, and the states most concerned are naturally in the far west where the orientals gain a foothold most easily. There is no law to exclude the Hindoos as there is to exclude the Chinese, and, even if there were, they could still come, as do the latter, via the British Columbia border at nightfall, unless an adequate border patrol should be established. Canada imposes a head tax of five hundred dollars on each Chinaman who enters that country, with the result that the fair Dominion gets the five hundred and the United States gets the Chinaman, a consummation not devoutly to be wished. The lure of higher wages, of course, is the drawing card.

The objection urged against the oriental is his inhumanly low standard of living and consequent ability to underbid all white labor. This country is not alone in opposition to the Hindoos; British Columbia is quite as excited as California, and has through the Dominion government required each Hindoo who enters British Columbia to have at least two hundred dollars. Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa are in a turmoil over the same question. In these cases we have one part of the British Empire legislating to keep out subjects of another part, which does not look like keeping peace in the family. In this country, the situation is entirely different, but opposition to the Hindoo is quite as marked. It remains to be seen how this new peril will be averted.

The "chambre à coucher" of the beautiful Princess Pauline, sister of Napoleon Bonaparte, is now a show-place of the British Embassy

The BRITISH EMBASSY in PARIS

THE King and Queen of England are to be entertained in Paris as only the French know how to entertain royalty. There will be special performances at the opera and the theatres, and a grand gala race meeting at Auteuil, to say nothing of dinners, banquets, and official calls. The French may be republican in spirit, but they are royalists at heart, and they dearly love all the pomp and glitter that attends a royal visit. It was at first expected that the royal visitors would stay at the English Embassy, which was accordingly put in order; but at present it is not determined whether or not the Embassy will be used. However, the house, which is very near the palace of President Poincaré, fairly shines with a brilliancy which rivals that of the days when it was the abode of beautiful Pauline Bonaparte, favorite sister of the great Napoleon.

ROYAL IN HERITAGE AND DESIGNING

The hotel was constructed at the end of the reign of Louis XIV, by Mazin for the Duke de Charost, Governor of Louis XV, and of the many ancient private hotels in Paris there are none more interesting than this one, 39 rue Faubourg-Saint-Honoré, now occupied by the English Embassy. It is interesting not only for its architectural beauty, but because of its history and its present environment.

It does not lack for distinguished neighbors. The Élysée palace in which President and Mme. Poincaré reside is situated a little farther up the street, beginning at Number 51. Number 41, next door to the Embassy, is the home of the Baron Edmond de Rothschild, which possesses a fine salon of Samuel Bernard, and another salon in pure Arabic style, executed by the architect of the Khedive Ismail. Strangers frequently stop before Baron de Rothschild's house to admire the beautifully carved, big street doors with the little bronze figures of Adam and Eve for handles. Number 33 is occupied by Dr. Henri de Rothschild, who dabbles at writing plays. He has constructed a fine stage and theatre in the gardens lying at the back of his house.

One of Napoleon's first acts of generosity to his family was to buy what is now the English Embassy for his beautiful sister, Pauline Bonaparte, for the sum of four hundred thousand francs. This princess inhabited the hotel only irregularly, but she made a number of changes in the interior, one of which was to turn the chapel into a billiard room. She also had the building redecorated, the work including the decoration of the Ionian salon on the ground floor, which is something like eight meters square. Princess Borghèse sold her hotel together with all its furnishings, except the celebrated surtout de table by Thomire, in Sèvres and chased gold, which brought her the further sum of three hundred thousand francs, to the Duke of Wellington for the English Government, and received for it five hundred thousand francs. The furniture included her entire bedroom suite which consisted of an Empire bed, a cheval mirror, a chaise longue and numerous other pieces of furniture all in mahogany ornamented with bronzes dorés. Other bibelots included the handsome bronze clocks and candelabra yet on the mantelpieces, and numerous bronze statues of great artistic and historical value. It is against this background, practically unchanged since the day of Princess Pauline, that the English Embassy will this year celebrate the hundredth anniversary of its occupancy of the building.

WITH RESPECT FOR HISTORY

Certain minor changes and many restorations have, of course, been made in the building; two ells have been run out at the back overlooking the gardens. One of these, which has a throne-room, is used for an audience chamber, and the other is a ballroom. Yet, while the interior has been redecorated, the Empire style has been preserved in historic accuracy. The grand staircase, a marvel of elegance, bears the hallmark of roi soleil in the gilded, wrought-iron sunbursts of the classic banisters.

The upper rooms of the hotel, which are now used as personal apartments by the present Ambassador, Sir Francis Bertie, and his family, are composed of a handsome suite of salons overlooking the gardens and the deep lawn which extends to the avenue Gabriel on the Champs Élysées. There is one Empire salon done in yellow, another in green, and, beyond this, the famous chambre à coucher of the beautiful Princess Pauline.

Through the course of the years many celebrated personages have stopped at this famous old hotel. Napoleon was of course there intimately in the days of Princess Pauline. An Emperor of Austria was entertained there; Queen Victoria stopped there in the year 1867, and the late King Edward lodged there on many occasions.

FOR THE HOSTESS

A VERY charming evolution of the hunt breakfast has developed in the form of a "stand-up luncheon." Women with country houses in the vicinity of a race-course or country club, where people from town congregate for some event in the world of sports, find that for an uncertain number of guests a stand-up luncheon makes it possible to entertain a larger number of guests than would otherwise be possible with a few servants.

At one of the best appointed luncheons of this kind, a long table, set with plates, knives, and so forth, was literally piled high with food, like the proverbial hunting table of old English days. Small tables were placed in the drawing-room and in the halls, though it is optional whether the guests sit or not at these luncheons. The men guests, assisted by a single man servant, waited upon the women of the party.

AN OLD-TIME MENU

As such a luncheon is a revival of an old custom, more character was given to the occasion by serving old-time dishes. For instance, instead of the usual ices, pumpkin and mince pies were served. Hot bouillon, cold turkey, cold chicken and ham, pickled oysters, and an assortment of salads, among them a very good one of red peppers stuffed with cream cheese, were included in the menu; pickled walnuts, chow-chow and those highly seasoned India relishes which men so enjoy were likewise served.

Served on a long, narrow wooden board were four or five different cheeses; Roquefort, Port au Salut, cream, Stilton, and Swiss, with a dish of the goose liver sausage that can be bought at any German delicatessen shop, hot biscuits, and thin slices of brown bread and butter.

The beverages were of a varied nature; jugs of milk, pitchers of cider, and mugs of ale, fresh-drawn. On a side-table were whiskey and soda, cigarettes, and cigars. Coffee in demi-tasses was served from the pantry on a tray.

HAM À LA VIRGINIA, AND PICKLED OYSTERS

A few old Virginia recipes which have been handed down from generation to generation seem particularly suitable for the stand-up luncheons that are becoming so popular. Though Virginia ham is considered more tempting than an ordinary ham, any other ham prepared in the Virginia way is almost as appetizing. Before it is baked the top of the ham should be stuck with cloves and thickly covered with maple sugar grated from a solid cake. It should be served with a hot sauce made of stewed raisins that have been soaked overnight.

Pickled oysters are delicious if prepared at home. A hundred large oysters should be set over the fire in their own liquor to which two ounces of fresh butter should be added. After they have simmered slowly for ten minutes, they should be carefully skimmed, then taken off the fire, strained, and spread in large dishes to cool as quickly as possible. The liquor, seasoned with an equal quantity of the best cider vinegar, a teaspoonful of salt, two dozen whole peppercorns, and one tablespoonful of powdered mace and nutmeg, should be boiled down to little more than enough to cover the oysters. These should be put in stone jars and covered with the hot liquor. The oysters should not be served until they are thoroughly cold.

CHEESE, THE APPETIZER, HAS MANY FORMS

The preliminary cocktails of such a luncheon are quite perfectly served when at each end of the tray on which they are served are plates containing round sandwiches filled with cream cheese which has been thinned with cream and mixed with chopped mint leaves.

Another novel sandwich which may be used as an appetizer is made of Roquefort cheese and green peppers. Graham bread, sliced very thin and cut diagonally into triangles, is spread with a mixture of Roquefort cheese which has been softened with mushroom catsup or olive oil and into which has been stirred a chopped green pepper, or chopped salted pecan nuts. The triangles piled on a plate are made more tempting if surrounded by a border of ice-cold, plain or stuffed olives.

Cream cheese instead of being used as a filling for sandwiches may be served with them in the form of balls. In this case the sandwiches may be spread with a boiled syrup of sugar and water, mixed with chopped nuts. They are laid around the edge of the plate and the small balls of cream cheese are piled in the middle.

OF SUGAR AND SPICE

For the little cakes that are so delicious with the ale served at a luncheon like the one described, ribbon cakes are just the thing. They are made by sifting together one pound of warm, sifted flour, a pinch of salt, and one-half pound of caster-sugar. To these ingredients four well beaten eggs and half a teaspoonful of almond flavoring should be added. The paste thus formed should be rolled out, and cut into strips about three inches long and two inches wide. These strips should then be cut for about three quarters of their length into narrow strips and separated as much as possible, so that they look like a small hand with long slender fingers. After they have been fried in cooking oil until they are a delicate brown, and while still warm they should be dusted with powdered sugar mixed with an equal quantity of ground almonds. When the cakes are done they should be deliciously light and crisp, with the strips curled up like the ends of ribbons.

Pumpkin and mince pies may be served in two ways, either in large round pies from which slices are cut, or in individual pastries, which at an informal luncheon are more convenient. To make a delicious filling for a pumpkin pie the pumpkin should be baked and when it is cool, the inside should be scooped out and strained. A quart of milk, a cupful of granulated sugar, three beaten eggs, one teaspoonful of ground cinnamon, one teaspoonful of ground ginger, a pinch of salt, and three tablespoonfuls of dark molasses should be stirred into the pulp of the pumpkin.

Not a sample package, but a full-size package—a regular 15-cent package. Take this coupon to your grocer. He will give you the package, and we will pay him his 15 cents.

You are asked to pay nothing at all.

A Surprise Package

If you never have tasted Puffed Rice or Puffed Wheat, this package will be a surprise. You will see crisp, toasted grains there, puffed to eight times normal size.

You will see grains that float like bubbles. Airy morsels with thin, brown walls surrounding a myriad cells.

But when you taste them comes the main surprise, for the taste is like toasted nuts. And the grains fairly melt in the mouth.

Then you will know what millions know—that these are the two most enticing foods ever made from grain.

Done for a Serious Purpose

But this College Professor had another purpose in making Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice. He found that whole grains, by no cooking process, were ever made wholly digestible.

So he-sealed up the grains in guns, and applied terrific heat. Thus he turned to steam the moisture inside of each food granule.

The Quaker Oats Company

Sole Makers

When that was done the guns were shot. The steam exploded and every food granule was literally blasted to pieces. Inside of each grain there occur in this process a hundred million explosions.

The result is easy and complete digestion. These grains are cooked as cereals never were cooked before. All the elements, for the first time, are made available as food.

Good for 15 Cents

This coupon will buy you—at your store—a package of Puffed Rice. Get it and let your folks enjoy it as our treat.

Serve some with cream and sugar. Mix some with fruit. Serve some in bowls of milk. Use some like nut meats in home candy making or as garnish for ice cream.

For these are both foods and confections.

this winter, are suggestive of the old, painted clock faces of Colonial days. The frame of the mirror reproduced on this page is of walnut veneer, and the quaint inset landscape is painted in pure colors on the glass—an unusual treatment and one that gives a very clear and translucent effect to the color.

IMITATING AGE

The large lower chest shown at the bottom of this page is really superb in color and extraordinary in design. It was inspired by an old Russian shrine, and its pleasant crudities suggest great age. But it is actually a modern American cedar chest, transformed into an object of beauty by Wilhelmine Weber. It measures one yard in length and eighteen inches in depth and width.

It is painted in the unadulterated colors of orange, yellow, and red in a crude, impressionistic design on a green-blue background. Miss Weber also painted the frames illustrated at the top of page 52.

AN AMERICAN ART

Not all the unusual objects displayed at these Modernist Studios are American, but wherever possible the American artisan is given preference. In foreign workmanship there is a Dutch china cupboard—a photograph of it appears above the middle of the first page—a copy of an old Hinterloopen one, that fits amicably among the more modern things. This little cupboard has a deep red ground covered with a peasant design in blue and yellow. The square panes of glass are outlined with gilt, and the inner part of the cupboard is painted a dark blue with decorations in gilt. As interesting as anything about the cabinet and entirely in keeping with its Hinterloopenness are the old-fashioned, china ornaments and quaint, crude plaques that appropriately adorn its shelves.

TO CREATE—NOT COPY

There are many small things—boxes and trays, wooden bowls and vases—decorated by the members of these Studios as, for example, those photographed at the top of this page.

There is a pitcher and bowl in vivid green on a black ground, planned especially for a child's room; there are modern candlesticks in strong colors, and wooden vases, suggestive in their allover patterns of Austrian textiles.

A broad band of walnut veneer sets off the sunny landscape painted in clear colors upon the glass above a mirror

A green-blue ground is used to increase the vividness of orange, yellow, and red in the crude figures that give foreign beauty to this wedding chest of sweet-smelling cedar

"BB" Laces

You Can Beautify

Even the most beautiful gown or the most exquisite lingerie with the wonderful "B. B." Laces.

Why? Because "B. B." Laces are so much like Hand-Made Laces that it is difficult to distinguish one from the other. This is the reason "B. B." Valenciennes and Clunies are so extensively used by exclusive stores and lingerie houses in the capitals and principal cities of the world.

Seeing Is Believing

Go to your favorite shop and ask to see the "B. B." Laces mounted on a card side by side with Hand-Made Laces of which they are reproductions.

You will be surprised at the wonderful similarity. On the card you will also

Mr. Sinclair Lewis, whose first book "Our Mr. Wrenn" is possessed of that rare quality which, even when it skirts the farcical, retains the confidence of the reader

WHAT THEY READ

Novels with Freshness and Sense of Character — Criticisms of Criticisms of Plays, and a Wonderful Picture-book

OUR MR. WRENN, THE ROMANTIC ADVENTURES OF A GENTLE MAN, by SINCLAIR LEWIS, sounds as fresh a note as anything in recent fiction on either side the Atlantic. To have conceived the idea of William Wrenn, the hard-working sales-entry clerk of the Souvenir Art Novelty Company, blessed, in his commonplace simplicity, with the soul of a gentleman and something like the imagination of a poet, was a daring invention. To have carried Mr. Wrenn triumphantly through his personal adventures in contact with a wide variety of persons and situations, was even more difficult of consummation. Mr. Lewis moves with ease and certainty among the scenes and persons of his imagination, and manages, even when he skirts the edge of the farcical, to retain not only the interest, but the confidence of the reader. He is equally at home in the office of the Novelty Company, the lodging-house of Mrs. Zapp, the fore-castle of the cattle ship, at the London lodging-house in Bloomsbury, among the deliciously touched groups of professionally emancipated men and women in London and New York, and in the frankly Philistine but cosily warm-hearted boarding-house of Mrs. Ferrard. To have lit up all these scenes and characters with the truth of a scintillant humor is a rare performance, and sane folk can not be too grateful for the happy fashion in which the unutterable cheapness and wearisome pose of the emancipated minor poets and skillless artists are displayed through the eyes of the clear-seeing Istra Nash. "Our Mr. Wrenn" is Mr. Lewis's first novel, and not one successful author in a dozen begins so well. He is not indebted in a discernible degree to any writer of his own time, nor has he gone to the past for inspiration. In this little volume he has given us an admirable gallery of portrait sketches, some heightened with a touch that stops just short of caricature, others marked with a minute realism, and all decorated with a genuinely creative humor. If Mr. Lewis shall fulfil in future books any considerable part of the promise, not only humorous, but serious, contained in "Our Mr. Wrenn," a good many brilliant contemporaries, and especially Mr. Locke, whose humor not remotely resembles Mr. Lewis's—though the Englishman never gets his feet as firmly planted upon the ground of reality as does Mr. Lewis when he chooses to descend from the height of the ridiculous—must shrewdly look to their laurels. (New York: Harper and Brothers, $1 net.)

THE FORTUNATE YOUTH, by WILLIAM J. LOCKE, is a frankly romantic story with more of sober realism in some of the subordinate characters and incidents than Mr. Locke usually permits himself, and less of fantastic humor throughout than one has come to expect in his stories. His hero, and this time the old romantic title of the protagonist really fits the case, is a beautiful youth brought up in a slum, who comes very early to believe in his star and to fancy himself of aristocratic origin. He has a selective taste in manners, and a quick mind that turns to the best in literature, so that when his real adventures begin he easily charms the aristocrats with whom his lot is thrown. At every crisis in the hero's career Mr. Locke boldly and unblushingly calls to aid the recognized machinery of romance. We have unexpected coincidences, strange and opportune reappearances and meetings, an infatuated princess, an almost equally infatuated old maid of the most generous character, a long lost father, a handsome inheritance, and all the rest. Everything turns to the advantage of the gloriously handsome young hero. He has native force, but his personal charm, his capacity for being just frank enough to captivate those who might have grown cold at the discovery of his true origin, his mental quickness, his engaging temperament, all help him even more than his force. Perhaps Mr. Locke would have us believe that there is some esoteric significance in his little romance, some symbolism teaching the lesson of the power that lies in firm devotion to an inward light, but most readers will be content to take the tale at its most obvious meaning. STUDIES IN STAGECRAFT, by CLAYTON HAMILTON, brings together an admirably written and strikingly significant set of twenty-four essays on subjects connected with the theatre. Mr. Hamilton is first of all broad in his view, so that he does not make himself in these altogether admirable essays the partizan of a particular form or period of the drama. He is appreciative of what has been, tolerant of what is, and hopefully the title rôle is the ever-recurrent fictional man of pure and unemotional theory caught in the toils of love, while the woman in the case is just a wholesome creature shipwrecked of marital happiness, and possessed of a marvelous singing voice, but cheerfully ready to give up a prospective professional career for love and a home. The other man, there always is another man, is the deserted husband of the singing lady, an ordinary, average, decent chap as tried by familiar masculine standards, and so conventional in his conception of the marital relation that he is bent upon murdering the wife and the man with whom she originally fled, who is not Anthony, the Absolute, but still another. Out of all this Mr. Mervin has constructed a most entertaining tale into which you may read any one of several interpretations. The Yoshiwara scene, one feels might have been toned down a little without injuring whatever musical and dramatic effect the author seeks to produce. (New York: The Century Co., $1.35 net.)

expectant of what may come. He declines to be stricken dumb by the name of Shakespeare, yet he has no mere cheap insurgency such as leads a few to belittle the great of the past. Intelligent playgoers will find Mr. Hamilton's discussion of stage decoration, stage convention, and stage direction genuinely helpful to the enjoyment of what is best in the theatre of the day. His article on the Irish drama is fresh and significant, and his call for a new type of play shows his largeness of sympathy and purview. Mr. Hamilton is a stylist with a gift for the effective phrase, almost epigrammatic in form. He has the courage to attempt a new definition of poetry, as "in a large and general sense . . . that solemn and tremulous happiness that overcomes us when we become unwittingly and poignantly aware of the existence and presence of the beautiful," a purely subjective concept that will be understood by any one who has responded to the stimulus of such lines as these, from "Romeo and Juliet,"

Stands tiptoe on the misty mountain-tops or, from Keats,

—magic casements, opening on the foam
Of perilous seas, in faery lands forlorn or, from Wordsworth,

—old, unhappy, far-off things,
And battles long ago.

Mr. Hamilton takes occasion to defend Sumurun, and he says, somewhat patronizingly, "To conceive such decoration as immoral is to confess a lack of culture," but he should have added that one school of esthetics denies the existence of ethics, while there are those who think that everything has more significance. IT HAPPENED IN EGYPT is another romance by the indefatigable C. N. and A. M. WILLIAMSONS, whose motor trips to various parts of the world may be traced by the scenes of their successive stories. This time the tourists have invaded Africa, and although the motor car does not appear in the foreground, everybody knows it was always waiting just around the corner. Practise has made the Williamsons highly skilful in weaving the kind of romance that their readers enjoy. As usual, they introduce us to a wealthy and aristocratic company of dramatis personæ, and the mystery of the treasure hunt, which does not eventuate in treasure-trove, really doesn't matter. Seldom has a romance opened better than this one with the scene on the deck of a big Mediterranean liner just moving out of the harbor of Naples on her way to Alexandria. The dialogue, as usual with the Williamsons, is breezily clever, and at times genuinely witty. There is enough but not too much of Egyptian local atmosphere and color, and the love stories are of a sort to please the most exacting of romantic readers. such scope, the author contents himself with a very brief sketch of Shakespeare's life, but the form and character of the Elizabethan theatre is emphasized as having an important relation to Shakespeare's dramatic methods. Mr. Matthews takes the opportunity presented by his chapter on "Shakespeare as a Reviser" to discuss the matter of the dramatist's plagiarism, and finds him in this aspect no worse than his age. The early comedies have a chapter, and it must be owned that the critic seems hardly to place himself in sympathetic relation to the author and his time in discussing "Love's Labour's Lost," certainly a play singularly antipathetic to sound modern taste, and marred with the most trying faults of the period, but a genuinely brilliant production of its kind. In the same way, he permits the offensive character of the plot in "Measure For Measure" to blind him to the splendor of its best parts, and the somber majesty of its spirit. It is delightful to find Mr. Matthews an enthusiast of the Falstaff plays, though he might have been a little more emphatic in pointing out that "The Merry Wives of Windsor" is really the only realistic drama of contemporary English life that Shakespeare wrote. Has the critic ever thought that perhaps Shakespeare undertook this work, not in deference to an expressed wish of Elizabeth, but rather with the thought of showing that he, too, could do a realistic play of "humours" as well as the young Ben Jonson? The discussion of the "Comedy of Errors" is valuable because Mr. Matthews points out here what few realize, that in this play Shakespeare shows himself, perhaps for the first time, a highly ingenious master of dramatic forms. "Romeo and Juliet" and "Othello" he also ranks as masterpieces of stagecraft, and he dissents from Goethe's judgment, expressed in the fascinating conversations with Eckermann, that "Macbeth" is the best of Shakespeare's acting plays. The critic notes that "The Tempest," alone among the plays, observes the unity of time, place, and action. In discussing this peculiarity of the play he seems to imply that Shakespeare does not elsewhere betray any consciousness of such unity, but it is hard to resist the belief that in a good many other places his slight obsession by the unity of time led him into otherwise inexplicable doings. Professor Matthew's book is full of charm and interest, not injured by slavish subservency to the greatest reputation in literature, and yet not cheapened by any attempt to belittle Shakespeare. The book is a royal octavo beautifully printed, and illustrated with a frontispiece showing Ward's Shakespeare, and with a cut of an Elizabethan theatre. (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, $3 net.)

THE WOLF OF GUBBIO, A COMEDY IN THREE ACTS, by JOSEPHINE PRESTON PEABODY (Mrs. Lionel Marks), should have had for subtitle, "A Christmas Phantasy," for such it is. Mrs. Marks has chosen for the time her little play the days of the lovable St. Francis, and for the place, the Italian village of Gubbio and the neighboring country. One seems to feel the influence of Rostand in the voices of the Wolf and the dryads, but Mrs. Marks always has her own original quality, and her own apt and choice diction. The Christmas spirit of the medieval church appears here, and good St. Francis shows himself in his character of a lover not only of men but of beasts. It is well known that the brutes can use human speech on Christmas eve, and the Wolf of Gubbio, who longs to be a man and to live at peace with those whom he has terrorized and harried, acquires this power and retains it on Christmas day. He also begins his life of regeneration by rescuing a lost babe and restoring it to its distracted mother. All this is told in alternate prose and verse; the latter is rhymed, and for the most part, beautiful in quality. (New York and Boston: Houghton Mifflin Company, $1.10 net.)

SANCTUARY, A BIRD MASQUE, presents in book form the interesting playlet written by PERCY MACKAYE for the dedication of the bird sanctuary at Meriden, New Hampshire, established last summer by the Meriden Bird Club. The masque was performed at Meriden with the cooperation of the Cornish colony of folk distinguished in arts and politics, and under the patronage of Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, who with the President and other members of his family, was summering at Cornish. The committee of arrangements included Mrs. Augustus Saint Gaudens, Kenyon Cox, Mr. Mackaye, Maxfield Parrish, Charles A. Platt, Joseph Lindon Smith, and half a dozen others. In the cast were several of the men of the committee, Miss Eleanor Wilson, daughter of the President, and Witter Bynner, the poet, besides about threescore others who participated in the pantomime as birds. The occasion was one of great interest and distinction, and its significance was all the more marked since the purpose was to awaken sentiment in favor of protecting the wild birds. Mr. Mackaye will permit the production of his masque by those who make application to him at Cornish, with the understanding that at least part of the proceeds of any public performance or reading shall go towards the protection of wild birds.

With great modesty Mr. Mackaye tells us that his masque was written and rehearsed for production in less than a month. As a literary performance, however, it needs no such apology. The conception is charming, and while the execution can not be regarded as a great piece of work, it has fine qualities both of feeling and diction. One of the archaic songs of Quercus, for example, has a delicious mimicry of Chaucer's style and spirit, while there is a charming classic touch in the description of the faun's piping:

"Long since, I heard the same Lulling to paleness the white morning star
Among Sicilian oaks."

The masque should be an almost perfect thing for reproduction amid its proper sylvan setting, and the merit of the colored illustrations of the volume is the effective fashion in which they suggest the actual scenes of the original performance. A colored portrait of Miss Eleanor Wilson in the character of Ornis forms the frontispiece of the volume, and there are three other illustrations in color, besides many photoengraved half-tones. (New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company, $1 net.)

PLAYS BY BJÖRNSTJERNE

BJÖRNSON presents the second series of these remarkable Norwegian dramas, as translated by EDWIN BJÖRKMAN. The translator writes an illuminating introduction, and gives us three plays: "Love and Geography," in which there is a domestic problem worked out with much humor; "Beyond Human Might," in which there is a strong tragic element, but again the relieving humor; and "Laboremus," which is more of a personal drama than the second play, and far less humorous than either of the others. These plays are given in an idiomatic English prose, with the occasional use of slang to simulate the free-and-easy speech of unconventional persons, and with passages of passionate eloquence. (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, $1.50 net.)

THE IDOL-BREAKER, by CHARLES RANN KENNEDY, is another allegorical play with a drunken blacksmith substituted for the Bishop's drunken plumber brother, a fat little village community for the respectable company of "The Servant in the House," and a symbolic woman of the road, the Idol-Breaker, for Manson. One can never quite escape a sense of pose in these things of Mr. Kennedy's. His tendency to speak of the firmament as "God's sky" begets in some folks the desire to have the canopy mentioned now and then without the owner's name attached, and, after all, it is also man's sky. (New York: Harper and Brothers, $1.25 net.)

ARTHUR RACKHAM'S BOOK OF PICTURES, with an introduction by SIR ARTHUR QUILLER-COUCH, presents in a good-sized quarto more than two-score of the illustrator's pictures in colors, besides many of his delightful sketches in black and white. The text of the volume includes extracts from several of the fables, tales, and fancies which the pictures illustrate, and the highly judicious and appreciative introduction. Everyday folk will owe a debt of gratitude to Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch for his quotations from Thomas Traherne and John Earle, and, indeed, every line of the introduction amply rewards the reader. As to the pictures, they have a singular charm for both old and young, though, of course, more especially the latter. Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch is right in thinking Mr. Rackham especially gifted in conveying the spirit of the woods and of individual trees, and several of the loveliest of these pictures are those that show us the forest depths. His "Dryad" in black and white, clinging close to her tree so that she seems part of the trunk, is highly effective. So, too, is "The Haunted Wood." Again, the effect of the serried tree trunks in the background of "The Frog Princess" is most impressive. Several of the pictures showing children against a background of meadow or seashore are exquisite. The marine monsters will be less appealing to some lovers of Mr. Rackham's work, and he really can not persuade the fellow countrymen of him who wrote "The Night before Christmas" to accept a revised version of St. Nicholas. (New York: The Century Co., $4 net.)

ON HER DRESSING-TABLE

WHERE there's no maid there's a way to powder oneself across the back and especially between the shoulder-blades. This little "hand-made" is shown in the middle of the page. The handle and back are covered with shirred satin ribbon, with the shirring outlined by ribbon roses. The powder is patted on with the lamb's-wool end. In charming light colors, this conceit costs $1.50.

THE STACK OF STOCKINGS

"I want just that pair of stockings and no other. But where is it?" And then follows an earthquake in the bureau drawer and stockings fly in all directions. But obtain such a device as is illustrated at the bottom of the page and temper and tempests will be no more. This contrivance is placed in the drawer, and the various kinds of stockings in the various sections. In the size shown, 16½ inches long by 11½ inches wide, the wooden frame is covered with cretonne for $1.75, and with brocade for $3.50. But the frame can be made to order in any size and covered with any material desired. It could be used also for ribbons, handkerchiefs, veils, gloves, and the many other little things that refuse to stay put.

OUR NEGLECTED FEET

In spite of the fact that our feet are the very foundation upon which our entire body rests, that we are using them constantly, that they are extremely sensitive—in spite of all this, we neglect them most shamefully and constantly, and then wonder why they ache, and with them our heads and backs. More often than is realized our many ills are directly due to abused feet. Then off to the chiropodist. But beware! More sins have been committed in the name of chiropody than most people (except the sufferers) wot of.

There is a woman doctor in New York, a surgeon, who has made the care of the feet a study for twenty-five years. She is a woman with a forceful personality, with an understanding and an honesty that are a joy to find. Her clientele is a large one and each member of it is a grateful patron because of the wonderful cures she has accomplished and the relief she has given—relief only, sometimes, for she will very frankly tell one that there are certain foot troubles which can not, at least up to the present time, be permanently cured. Very dependable is this woman's advice on the care of the feet, and where there is no ailment of any kind except tiredness, she has a wonderful tonic which cools and soothes and rests the feet, quiets and strengthens the nerves, and removes every ordinary ache and pain. For dance-tired feet this tonic, applied with a brush is almost magical in its effect. The price of this tonic is $1 per bottle. The treatments vary in cost according to the amount of work required.

A SKIN BALM

The cold, chapping winds of winter are scarce gone before the skin-roughening winds and the blistering sun of summer are here—at least for the woman who loves the out-of-doors. Unfortunately, her skin must pay the penalty of so much exposure to the elements, unless she takes some precaution. In a large city in New York State is put up in a certain woman's private laboratory a liquid that is unusually effective in returning the hands and face to a soft condition. The physicians of that city recommend it and the residents use it. It might be called an old-fashioned toilet-water, since it is composed, among other things, of lavender, oil of cloves, and a small amount of carbolic acid, all of which ingredients have certain well-known beneficial qualities. It has an agreeable feeling on the hands, and leaves upon them a clean, pleasant odor. Its price is 50 cents a bottle.

A CREAM AND A SACHET

There is an excellent French cream that leaves no greasy trace of its beneficial presence. And yet it contains predigested dairy cream and olive oil, both of which are valuable elements for nourishing the skin and keeping it in a smooth and healthy condition. Because of this unusual combination of non-greasiness and nourishment, this preparation is superior to many of the finishing creams. It is agreeable to the senses of sight, touch, and smell; it is a splendid basis for face powder, and it costs 50 cents a jar.

Talcum powders, under that name, at least, have been little used by the French until they were popularized by Americans. Now they are producing powders called "talc," which are as good, if not better, than many of ours. There is one especially that is quite delightful, both in the fineness of grain and in the sweetness of its perfume. In pink or white, in a shaker box, it is 25 cents.

THE best dressed women are not necessarily the most expensively dressed women; good taste and the perfect fit of your gowns count for more in producing a fashionable appearance than does costliness of material.

Well dressed women realize the importance of wearing the best corsets; no amount of good taste can make a poor corset give the effect of a good one. A great many such women know that Le Rêvo, Society's Corset, offers them just what they need in a corset, whether as an individual garment, or considered as a foundation for fashionable gowns.

You want style in a corset. The styles of Le Rêvo Corsets originate in Paris, with the new styles in gowns.

You want comfortable fit. Every style of Le Rêvo is fashioned and fitted over a well-formed living figure; it is made to fit.

You want service. Le Rêvo Corsets are made from the finest materials obtainable, by the highest class of skilled labor; your satisfaction with them is guaranteed.

You want, above all things, the knowledge that you are correctly corseted; Le Rêvo, Society's Corset, will give you that mental comfort. The price is somewhat above the average; but when you wear Le Rêvo, you'll be glad you paid it.

THE POTTER and HER CLAY

TO possess something that is quite different from the possessions of her friends, to make her home unique and individual, is a very real desire on the part of almost every woman. In spite of this, however, it is not unusual for a woman to search every nook and corner of the shops and end in sheer desperation by buying the tableware for her country house from a hackneyed, open stock pattern.

Of course every one is not artistic enough to design an original pattern for such tableware, and so, for most women, the solution of the difficulty lies in the crafts shop. With some cleverness of suggestion on the part of the purchaser charming patterns may be evolved by the workers in these shops. One quaint Boston shop has attained unusual originality in such matters. About a dozen young Italian girls who are employed in this shop under competent instructors are ap-club who have learned the potter's trade are now working eight hours a day with the help of an art school graduate, and a man to tend the firing kiln.

NO TWO OF A KIND

On every piece of pottery sent out from the shop are the initials "S. E. G. C.," showing that it is the work of the Saturday Evening Girl's Club, and this is about the only bit of sameness in the pottery. The colors used are mainly dull, soft yellow, old-blue, green, tan, and gray, and the designs, which are quaint and simple animal and flower figures, are colored in flat tones and outlined in black. At this shop one can buy many things—a breakfast set, flower bowls, boxes for the veranda, jardinières, and even a bedroom set for the bungalow—made to suit individual taste and, best of all, in a design that no one else can buy. Odd color schemes, little fads and fancies of design, cypher monograms, and personal touches of almost any kind can be introduced in the decoration of the ware as the purchaser desires.

DURABLE AS CAN BE

An important thing to remember is that this is pottery-ware—not china. In simplicity of form and in decorative motive it resembles Aztec and other Indian pottery. The soft, rich colors, and the beautiful glaze that has been developed according to an English rule, are being reproduced more and more successfully and make this pottery more artistic than much of the fine, imported china. The ware is durable, so durable, in fact, that it can be used in the bungalow every day with small danger of breakage.

Six younger clubs are now connected with the parent club which established the crafts shop, and a summer camp has been opened at which the Saturday Evening Girl's Club hopes in time to build a pottery shop for summer work. Prominent Boston society women are interested in the club, which has classes in music and literature as well as in pottery work, and until it can be made self-supporting it is assisted by contributions.

The crafts shop was established five years ago, to teach a trade to girls with an art talent, and in the beginning all the work was done in the evening by what was known as the Saturday Evening Girl's Club. About a dozen members of the

THE OLD PIECES

The jewelry shown above was not desirable, because of its old-fashioned appearance. These pieces were not being used by our customer, so we were ordered to mount the diamonds in a LaValliere of modern design.

DIAMONDS, in old-fashioned jewelry, haven't lost an iota of their brilliancy, nor has their beauty faded. During the last ten years, diamonds have doubled in value; nevertheless, many costly pieces of diamond jewelry lie hidden in safe deposit vaults or jewel boxes because the designs are no longer desirable.

Why Not Make All Your Jewelry Wearable? These old pieces of jewelry may, at a slight expenditure, be reset into modern mountings. Such a change will be a genuine economy. The results will surpass your expectations. Our facilities for this work are unequalled.

One example of our delicate art is shown in these two illustrations.

DESIGNS AND ESTIMATES: Send your diamond jewelry to us by express. We will submit a design carrying out your ideas, and an exact estimate of the cost. The work will not be begun until you have accepted our estimate. If desired, the old mountings may be left with us, and their value as old gold will help pay for the work.

If our estimate is not accepted, we will return the jewelry precisely as received, and we will prepay the return charges.

Send for Spring catalogue; it illustrates many examples of remounting, and desirable new productions in diamonds, watches, jewelry and silverware.

THE NEW PIECE

This beautiful, modern LaValliere, of platinum, was designed especially to hold the diamonds which were brought to us in the old jewelry. No new stones were added.

Will Receive Many Fair
Americans During the Coming Weeks

While abroad, ever so many of Mrs. Adair's American patrons seek her London and Paris Salons, at the above addresses, there to obtain the refreshing, rejuvenating GANESH Treatments, or to replenish their precious stock of GANESH Preparations, without which it would be so difficult to maintain a presentable appearance when touring.

Soot, Dust and Dirt are Easily Vanquished

But these objectionable incidents to travel are the least of one's toilette perplexities. It is the more formidable barriers to genuine good looks, the deeply cut face lines, the lesser markings, "crow's feet," etc., the annoying and inexcusable acne or blackhead, the overcoming of which has gained for Mrs. Adair a reputation which is truly said to be world-wide. The practice of the only genuine Strapping Muscle Treatment is positively confined to Mrs. Adair's three Salons, where her personally trained English assistants administer the various GANESH Treatments.

Of Course, Many Cannot Visit the Salons

Mrs. Adair has located her Salons in the three most central metropolitan cities of the world, yet they are, of course, without the reach of many who would and do receive treatment from her. This is why she sends the splendid GANESH Preparations, with her personal instructions for using the same, by post, thereby making it possible for women everywhere to benefit by their potency.

Notable Amongst the GANESH Preparations Are

GANESH MUSCLE DEVELOPING OIL ($5, $2.50, $1), which strengthens the underlying tissues and muscles, filling in wrinkles and hollows. GANESH JUNGLE ($2.25, $1.25) to make round and firm the neck and bust. GANESH PARISIAN BEAUTY NEIGE CREAM (Pink, White, Cream, $1.50) to make the skin smooth and satiny. GANESH LILY SULPHUR LOTION ($2.50, $1.50) to whiten the skin and free it from redness, or roughness.

MOTOR NOTES

Casting the Light of Lamps on Road and Tonneau, and the Light of Invention on the Fading Hope for a Really Efficient Lock RECENT accounts in the daily papers of New York giving details of the activities of an organized band of automobile thieves who have successfully disposed of more than a million and a half dollars' worth of stolen motor cars have aroused the interest of every automobile owner in the various styles of thief-proof locks that prevent the operation of a vehicle without the consent of the owner. Several such locks have been described in these columns, but one has recently been devised that is radically different from any of those heretofore mentioned. It consists of a series of ten black push buttons mounted on a brass or nickel plate that is set on the dash or cowl of the car. The ignition system of the motor is connected with these buttons in such a manner that the proper circuit will not be formed unless a certain three, four, or five of the number are pressed in a special, prescribed order. The remainder of the buttons are "dummies," any one of which, when pressed, will release any of the others of the combination that may already have been operated. Therefore, not only must the proper buttons be pressed in the right order, but the wrong ones must not be manipulated, and it may well be imagined that even the unusually intelligent motor car thief will be baffled when it is understood that any one attempting to tamper with a four-button combination will have one chance in some one hundred and fifty thousand of "happening" on the right buttons in their proper order. The combination can only be changed by the factory, and thus the car is doubly protected. The device described is so solidly constructed that it can not be damaged by the average burglar's tools, and there is really no way of making the necessary ignition circuit connections for operating the car without manipulating the buttons in their proper order. The price of the lock complete is $20.

TWO-IN-ONE LIGHTS

Those motorists who desire to use their electric headlights for driving into cities in which an ordinance forbids the use of a dazzling light will be interested in a lighting system recently developed by one of the prominent automobile manufacturers. This consists of a series of vertical shutters interposed between the globe and the reflector in each lamp. These shutters are of a dull material, so that when they are turned to form a flat surface between the lamp and the reflector only the diffused, unintensified rays of the light itself are thrown out. By the simple pressure of a button on the dash, however, an electric magnet is operated that swings the shutters at right angles to their former position so that the rays of light pass unobstructed from the globe to the reflector, and thence far out into the darkness.

MORE LIGHT ON THE TONNEAU

It is generally considered that a closed car offers more opportunity for the installation of electric lights than does the touring automobile. While this is true to a certain extent, the open car has not been neglected, and even when completely enclosed with a top and side curtains, the tonneau need not be a gloomy compartment. In one popular car electric lights are placed near the floor at the back of the front seat. Although their rays are directed backward into the tonneau the lights themselves do not project, as they are set flush with the surface of the seat. As the lights are placed at either side of the middle of the seat, they illuminate both doors and running-boards, thereby performing the service usually performed by the ceiling lights and step lights of the present day, well equipped limousine.

THE "SOCIAL" CAR

One of the most striking evidences of the present tendency of most motor car owners to dispense with the services of high-priced chauffeurs is to be found in the increasing popularity of the six-passenger car, which is usually and preferably driven by the owner. So far as the general arrangement is concerned, this car is similar to the well-known seven-passenger type, but the body has been narrowed somewhat at the rear so that only two persons can be accommodated comfortably on the back seat. This has served to improve the appearance of the car and has also added to the comfort of the occupants of the rear seat, for there is not the temptation to "squeeze in" an extra passenger.

Also, the comfort of the occupants of the rear seat has been further increased in the case of some cars by the use of a division in the form of a well-upholstered arm rest in the middle. This forms two distinct rear seats, similar to the "bucket" seats of the front of the car, and furnishes a comfortable arm rest for both occupants. If but one passenger is occupying the rear seat, he or she will not feel "lost," and the arm rest will serve to prevent the sliding, slipping, and swaying that can oftentimes be overcome only by a tense pressure against the foot-rail and a firm grip on one side of the body. No longer need passengers be packed tightly in the rear seat in order to be held in place on a rough tour, for each now has a "niche" of his own that he may occupy undisturbed.

CONFIDENCE!

The simple Ohio Electric magnetic control and magnetic brake make the most nervous person feel absolutely safe.

IT IS an everyday occurrence for women who have never operated an electric to step into an Ohio and drive right away with but a word of instruction.

The magnetic control and magnetic brake make this possible. Turn the control disc forward, and you go forward; backward, and you go back. The magnetic brake operates merely on pressure of a button. It is effective even on the most slippery streets. Double contracting external foot-brakes, for emergency use, are also a part of Ohio equipment. The double drive—now so widely imitated—is another feature originated by us.

We have been told that the present Ohio models are the most beautiful electric pleasure vehicles ever produced. But we should be pleased to have your judgment on this point, as well as on the mechanical superiority of the car.

MUCH DANCING IN LITTLE SPACE

DELIGHTFUL little things are always being planned in the way of apparel for the woman with a limited income, but until recently very little attention has been paid to the needs of the hostess of limited space. This is her hour of triumph, however. No longer does she look in despair at her small rooms, and cry, "Oh, that these too, too solid walls would melt!" Instead, she merely plans a little changing about of furniture, and—voilà, a social triumph is hers!

The delightful and increasingly popular function known in Paris as the Thé Dansant, and in other places as the "Tango Tea," may be celebrated in a surprisingly small space. This does not mean, of course, that one is necessarily confined to dancing the tango upon such an occasion, for most of the new dances have an originally delightful quality—they can be performed satisfactorily in a comparatively small space.

In learning the new dances it is a good plan for the layman to realize that the only model to take is a teacher who has acquired grace and distinction through quiet dancing. There is no place for the athletic college youth who wiggles his shoulders, pumps his arms, and plunges about, for no matter how adept feet become in the Terpsichorean art the modern dances require unceasing team work between head and heels. The Castle House rules for correct dancing which are enumerated here are as valuable to the modern dancer as are the familiar, cleverly epigrammatic hints anent auction bridge.

CASTLE HOUSE RULES

These rules are: "Do not wriggle the shoulders, shake the hips, twist the body, flounce the elbows, or pump the arms. Do not hop—glide instead—and avoid low, fantastic, and acrobatic dips.

"Stand far enough away from your partner to allow free movement of the body in order to dance gracefully and comfortably. The gentleman should rest his right hand lightly against the lady's back, touching her with the finger tips and wrist only, or, if preferred, with the inside of the wrist and the back of the thumb. The gentleman's left hand and forearm should be held up in the air parallel with his body, with the hand extended and the lady's hand held lightly on his palm and between the thumb and forefinger.

"Remember, you are at a social gathering and not in a gymnasium. Do not dance the Turkey Trot, the Grizzly Bear, the Lamé Duck, the Bunny Hug, and so forth; these dances are ugly, ungraceful and out of fashion."

The clever hostess who starts out to entertain by giving small dances realizes that the keynote must be good taste, and she indicates that the no doubt well-meaning but inartistic dances are not approved of. A description of the methods of a young bride, who has started a series of Thé Dansants will, perhaps, give an idea of how simple and yet successful it is possible to make them. Her apartment represents the latest achievement of modernity; boasts every new invention, but not a great deal of space. However, the living-room is square and opens off a hall that was designed to be furnished as a small reception-room.

Upon a recent occasion some guests were coming to dinner, and the problem arose in the hostess's mind of how to amuse them afterwards, as it is a well-known fact that the art of conversation is almost obsolete. The mere thought of auction bridge made this particular hostess yawn; nothing, in fact, quickened her pulse but the thought of a dance, and so, after a very charming little dinner, she suggested that the guests roll back the rugs, and try just a step or two. One of those convenient instruments that require no attention save that of the watchful host who automatically dashes upon it in time to save the needle from scratching the record, provided the music.

The bit of dancing was a delightful finale to the dinner, and the discovery once made that much dancing could be done in a little space, the custom of having guests drop in two or three afternoons a week for an informal dance was easily established, and now the bride enjoys an enviable popularity as a successful hostess.

The details of such entertaining are so simple that they really do not sound true. In the apartment described the guest room, which opens most conveniently off the hall, is upon dance occasions arranged as a sitting-room and nicely accommodates the extra tables and chairs from the living-room. The tables are prettily placed to give a real tango-tea atmosphere. On each of them is a little candle shaded in red, and the guests sit about them between dances, and take their refreshments and smoke.

In the dining-room the tea-tray, the punch-bowl, and sandwiches and cakes are all arranged so the guests may help themselves. The clever bride has found that the men really enjoy mixing their own drinks, and so on the sideboard are trays with glasses, cocktail shakers, lemons, sugar, decanters, and cracked ice for the purpose.

Like every other epidemic, dancing is in a very acute form when it first possesses one, so that the enthusiasts do not notice the details of a dancing party as much as the anxious hostess may think. Given a good floor, a pleasantly ventilated room, and comfortable chairs to lounge and smoke in between dances, guests do not care for elaborate refreshments, and a retinue of servants is not needed. In fact, in a little space, with little more than a loaf of bread and a jug of wine by way of refreshments, only two maids, and no orchestra, one can accomplish some successful entertaining.

Where Children Play and Learn

"The Helen Speer Room"—Hotel Vanderbilt

There are over 600 rooms in the Hotel Vanderbilt—beautiful, luxurious rooms where people live and sleep.

And there is one room where children play and learn.

This idea—this child's playroom idea—is also being adapted to American homes, where children have their own room, with every bit of it, from floor to ceiling, made for them.

The wall designs, the furniture, the books and games are all theirs—the children's—and they love this room. Their parents have hard work to get them out of it at meal-time or bed-time.

We furnish complete equipments to fit various sized rooms, in homes of different sorts, and without overtaxing the moderate purse.

There is a BOY SCOUT room, a KING ARTHUR room, a MOTHER GOOSE room, a JAPANESE room, and others.

All parents who read VOGUE should send for our free Portfolio of colored plate-prints illustrating these delightful and instructive room-treatments.

Do this today, and you will be interested also in what we will write you.

Sir George and Lady Alexander add to their week-end cottage the charm of a rustic tea-house in the garden was originally a meadow, is a most delicious spot wherein to dream.

Sir George and Lady Alexander have an unassuming house in the same place, to which they motor down from town. One of the attractive features of the garden is a little tea-house which forms a delightful center for the informal gatherings so dear to the heart of an actor, and, for that matter, to most people of this informal age.

stance, a genuine gate-legged table. Moreover, "periods" in china may be successfully disregarded. Brilliant Chelsea china birds may stand side by side with rare specimens of Battersea enamel, and Spanish drug-jars may gaze down in hybrid curiosity at a Lowestoft teacaddy. As there is no relentless custom-house official awaiting the Englishwoman, when returning from a trip abroad, she may indulge her taste for foreign antiques without let or hindrance.

ANTIQUES OF THE VINTAGE OF 1914

Little can be hoped from antique-hunting in the peasant cottages in the neighborhood of London. Long ago have these good people realized the value of their humble lares and penates. For the gullible—and there will always be some—many London antique dealers distribute their reproductions among the country workmen's cottages. A dresser or a grandfather's clock is placed temptingly near the open door to attract the passing motorist; warming-pans, hung near the fireplace, are disposed of by the hundreds, for they are easily tucked into the motor as a "souvenir"; luster bowls and brass candlesticks of the vintage of 1914 are stowed away as "finds." The devices are as many and ingenious as the tourists are many and ingenuous.

No one thing can be more decoratively "in the picture" in these little cottages than old-fashioned china, and there is more chance of obtaining a rare bit of it than there is of finding, for in-

WITH EVERYTHING IN THE PICTURE

A Brittany tea-set on which the picturesque French peasant is represented in crude yet fascinating colors makes a delightful decoration for the kitchen shelf, and old Delft tiles from Holland may be utilized in a hundred attractive ways. Your Englishwoman may bring back beautiful, old, carved shutters from a tumble-down house in Normandy and persuade the village carpenter to convert them into a china cupboard, or she may even aspire to a tiny look-out window over the sea, to which these shutters will add a touch of medieval charm.

Say one discover such a treasure as "The Farm" or "King's Farm"; the next thing is to furnish it in its own particular style—a task by no means so easy as to be uninteresting; for it requires no inconsiderable taste, tact, and forethought to secure just the right furnishings to complete the charm of the intimate appeal of an old-time cottage.

The Dawn of To-day

It was as though I stood upon a plain Dammed tower-high with mists all wraithed thin,
And far, far out, beyond my farthest reach
A rim of shrouded mountains bound me in.

And in the midst of this dead-level space
I stood unquestioning, nor even found
Impulse to lift my weighted lids, but lived Unsensed as moles that burrow under ground.

Then came a day when some blind motion glimpsed
Me the passionless past all shot with pain,
And like a child that shudders in its sleep
I slipped the subtle coil that bound my brain.

A sudden forked lightning clove the hills;
A sudden furious storm swept o'er the plain;
The tempest crushed my limbs in agony,
And Consciousness arose from what was slain.

Gentlemen:-

The dancing shoe which you have made from my design is ideal.

I had not dared dream that my idea of a "Hesitation Pump" could be so perfectly realized, and was happily surprised to find that you had been able to fit in so perfectly all the features I've found essential to flexibility, comfort and grace.

I am enthusiastic over the Sandal effect of the new Satin Slipper. The elastic instep band, which you have cleverly concealed with a broad ankle strap, is a Parisian idea which I "brought over" (without duty) with a few new steps.

Won't you please let me know when you have this shoe in your stores, as I am confident the patrons of Castle House and those whom I instruct will agree with me that in a dancing shoe, ease is quite as necessary as smartness.

It's a stunning model.

Vernon Castle

trees to sell, with their usual deadly acumen and I suppose laudable enterprise, located me—the person who had trees to buy—instantly and unerringly, and life was hideous for days and weeks thereafter, not only because of their persecutions but because of my own terrible uncertainties, and Tully's absolute worthlessness! For he was, for once in his life, absolutely worthless. The wretched man actually wanted me to buy the same kind of stuff I had so laboriously gotten rid of. And between discouragement at not knowing what to do, the horde of dealers with their glittering promises, and his traitorous attitude, I nearly did buy just another such collection of ill-assorted mates.

A REASONABLE MADNESS

Only nearly, though—not quite. For with this, as with all my other problems in the garden, I had really been at work—involuntarily this time perhaps, and only half-consciously. But work counts whether it is conscious or unconscious, and it brought me my reward in the shape of just the exact piece of literature about trees and their arrangement that I needed. Here I found, put into words, the thing which, unknown and unsuspected within me, had actuated my wholesale sacrifice, although I had never been able to put it into words myself when I had tried to explain and defend my rash course to my alarmed family and neighbors. "Nature continually presents thickets and groups and patches, dominated by one variety." That was it—dominated by one variety! Of course, this furnished me at last with the reason for my madness—which I myself had never actually known; and it gave me a clue to what I should do, and why I should do it.

Instantly I saw that to be in harmony with a natural arrangement such as this lawn planting of mine was to be, the trees must be chosen to assist in the illusion that said bit of lawn had been naturally come by. It was a glade, presumably, wherein my dwelling had been built (all lawns are that, I saw, as the revelations of this new stimulus discovered themselves to me), and so it must lie presumably within a forest or a grove. The task before me was simply that of deciding what kind of a forest or grove—not of merely trying to "pick out trees."

I kept all of this to myself, for I began to see that somehow I had come upon a deeper truth than many would apprehend; and that would mean small sympathy and much advice, and a great deal of argument and probably considerable indignation and impatience, all of which would be avoided by holding my tongue. So I held it, and held it in my cheek sometimes, when I heard what my friends had to say. I took to walking about in such woods as lay reasonably near; and denied myself to all nurserymen's representatives.

THE STARRY DOGWOOD AMONG BEECHES

And this is how it came about that my lawn became a glade in a beech wood, with pines encroaching upon the north. For I found such a glade one wonderful day in one of my rambles, when the dogwoods were in blossom. So my glade is lightened by these, just a few of them that gleam out from under the exquisite sprays of the beeches exactly as if they had grown up together there, from the seed.

Winter and summer, these gray, satin-clad princes of the forest are more beautiful than any other deciduous tree in the world, I think; and is it not a part of my general great good fortune that the "tree before the door" is also of this matchless species?

Out-of-door taste passeth comprehension, but I am beginning to believe that it revealeth the man. Certain there be

The world's finest dining cars

Have you ever seen such a cheerful and comfortable looking dining car as this one?

This car belongs to a Swiss railway, and it surely emphasizes in a splendid manner how Switzerland has reduced travel to a science and how delightfully convenient it is to tour through that country.

Look at those large windows! Think of the flood of light and the invigorating air which they allow to penetrate; and imagine the glorious, unobstructed views you will get of the Alpine wonderland!

While you are enjoying an exquisitely prepared luncheon in such a car, your eyes behold an ever-changing panorama of babbling brooks and roaring waterfalls; of verdant valleys and Alpine pastures; of graceful hills and snow-crowned peaks; of tiny hamlets, picturesque villages, mediæval cities and ancient strongholds.

The line on which this photograph was taken is electric, and electricity, as you know, stands for absolute cleanliness.

You will, of course, visit Switzerland sooner or later. It's only a question of how long you will delay that trip abroad which you have been dreaming about.

Why defer your trip any longer? We will gladly suggest an attractive Tour.

We do not sell Tours. Our sole purpose is to answer questions and enable you to easily plan a delightful holiday in our land of Lakes and Legends.

We want you to see the best within the time at your disposal and for the money you are willing to spend.

We have specially prepared a useful collection of illustrated literature called Pocket Series No. 33, which includes a Swiss Tourist Map, the famous Hotel Guide of Switzerland, and many practical suggestions.

who have appreciated my glade of beeches to the high degree of emulation; certain others there be who say they appreciate it, but they do not emulate; and certain others frankly do neither, but tell me with delicate and pitying wonder how great is my mistake to have set out only one kind of tree, "when there are so many wonderful things that will grow here!" And no one but the young art student whose motor cycle bucked him off at my gate last summer and made him my involuntary guest for a fortnight with a broken rib or two and an almost broken crown, and my young brother's bashful chum, and the grandchild, aged five, of next door, has ever really apprehended it—has ever felt and responded to its perfection.

A PREACHMENT FOR TRUE DISCIPLES

The art student loved it best of all the spots around the place, and came out every day, as soon as he was able, to paint it; the chum confided to me fearfully and shamefully that he was willing to bet Eden had nothing on that grove of young beeches. "It makes a fellow feel bully just to look in under 'em, somehow," he wound up. And the granddaughter openly avowed it to be the fairy queen's own royal court.

Not without having observed men and their gardens widely and very keenly, did Francis Bacon give utterance to his oracular pronouncement that they are good builders long before they are good gardeners. One must have arrived at the nicest distinctions and the finest sense of proportion, and must have attained the most exquisite discrimination, before it is possible to be certain of not being misled, of not permitting an anachronism, of not yielding to careless impulse.

Nothing, in fact, tries me more than to be imitated blindly, as one or two have imitated me in this matter of the trees. Sincere flattery though it be, it would have been greater unction to my soul if the principle itself had struck in rather than my working-out of it. A multitude of beech-tree glades may, and indeed do, have merits that the same number of freak tree collections could not possibly lay claim to, but it has not been as gratifying to my spirit to see these springing up here and there as it would have been to see the principle of nature adopted.

TEMPERAMENTAL JOURNEYS FOR "SHRUBS"

The shrubbery which completes around the lawn the hedge that the trees begin, was much of it on the place and had been growing for many a year before I was moved to rearrange it. The moving of these old standbys was something of a task, even for Tully's skill. He chose late fall as the proper time, after they had gone to sleep for the winter, and so could be taken unawares; and he insisted on knowing exactly where I wanted each one to go before he would let it be touched. He dug the most enormous holes to get them up, and more enormous ones to put them into, explaining to me long and patiently that they must come out of the ground without so much as the least pull at their roots, and go into it with roots in exactly the position they had occupied originally. Wherever a long wandering root trailed off adventurously, he made the men dig carefully along its entire length, until it could be lifted freely; for the tips of roots are more important, it seems, than all the rest of them, since the feeding tissues are always the tender and delicate ones, not the woody.

A HEDGE TO SHUT THE WORLD AWAY

I used the lilacs mostly to screen the driveway, and there were enough of them, and enough varieties, to give us lilac bloom over a period of quite six weeks. In front of them, down next to the driveway, so that they fill the space low down where the lilac bushes are deficient, I had barberries, and spiræas and weigelas and deutzias and elder and swamp-mallows planted—these last are from the swamp to be sure, but they are the most accommodating plants, for they will grow anywhere. They bloom late in August when not another shrub save their relative, the rose of Sharon, shows a scrap of color.

Thickly behind the lilacs I scattered the conglomeration of old shrubs that I had to dispose of, and carefully atoned for this disregard by selecting with great pains the foreground specimens that should bring the whole mass down to the lawn.

The flowering dogwood, as I mentioned, and shadbush, and some of the large viburnums furnish undergrowth for my beeches as these recede from the glade; and the glade itself—which is the lawn, remember—is carpeted with a wonderful lush turf in the emerald depths of which a thousand, or two, or three, blue-eyed squills lie safe and unsuspected through eleven twelfths of the year, to make us gasp at their blueness and their bravery during the other temperamental one twelfth. And from only one place inside this wall of shrubbery may the road be seen, and from the road the briefest glimpse of the long, low-gabled house flashes into view and is as quickly gone again.

CHARMING costume of chiffon taffeta in quaint 1830 style, heavily embroidered in front and back. Collar, sleeves, ruff and fluted ruching of organdie. Price, $185.00.

You have only to follow the rules here given, and, no matter where you are, you will have your choice of anything you see in Vogue and also any other desired article that can be had in the great department stores or exclusive small shops of New York.

How To Order

1. Vogue will buy for you any article editorially mentioned or advertised in Vogue; also any other that can be had in New York. When ordering anything Vogue has published, please give date of issue and number of page.

2. Enclose cheque to cover the cost of the articles you want. If you do not know exact cost send approximate amount and the balance, if any remains after purchase, will be refunded. 3. Unless otherwise requested, articles are sent express collect. Charges will be prepaid if so instructed; but orders will not be sent C. O. D. When ordering small, light articles include postage so that they may be mailed.

4. Only by special advance arrangement will articles be sent on approval. If you return them, your remittance will be refunded, but express charges both ways will be at your expense. And, when such arrangement has been made, and you find it necessary to return articles, send them to Vogue and not to the shop.

5. Vogue makes no charge for its service; to avoid book-keeping, Vogue is not in a position to open charge accounts with any patrons. Nor can Vogue undertake to charge articles to your own account in the shop from which you are purchasing. All orders are to be accompanied by the appropriate remittance.

6. When ordering garments, be sure to state size; and to give your preferences as to style, color and material. Please name your second choice when possible.

7. Please write your name and address very legibly—and the forethought of those who write on but one side of the paper is appreciated very much. A stamped envelope should be enclosed when reply is desired.

When ordering articles advertised in Vogue it will save time to write to the shops direct; but do not hesitate, if it seems better to let Vogue buy for you any articles advertised in its pages, as well as articles editorially mentioned.

Note:—This is the second of the two articles purposing to tell those Americans of limited means who are contemplating their first residence in Paris, how best and most economically to live there. The first article told how to find and rent an apartment and how to leave it. This article goes into such details as how, having rented the apartment, to make it comfortable with the aid of plumbers, painters, electricians, and other of the artist-artisans of Paris

THE modern Paris apartment-house is heated. It is the heating of decades upon decades of tradition; it means that the furnace is lighted on November first, whether it be freezing in October or not, and is put out on April first, regardless of the weather. There are bathrooms, too, in the modern Paris apartment, but only in very rare cases is hot water provided for them from a central source. Instead, each bathroom has a gas water-heater within arms' reach of the tub. First one turns on the gas by a lever, then lights a small jet which emits a tongue of flame like a cigar lighter in a tobacco shop, and in less than a minute the water is heated by a mysterious system of spiral, copper tubing. Many of these gas-heaters work excellently, and, if intelligently handled, they are not at all dangerous.

FIRST SEND FOR THE PLUMBER

Old-fashioned apartments are not heated, neither are they equipped with electric lights, nor provided with bathrooms, and it is in installing these necessities that one comes in contact with the French workman and his methods.

First, one sends for the plumber. Ah! the plumber! This important personage, who is heavily impressed with himself and his ability, presents himself, looks over the work to be done, and talks a great deal of the difficulties of accomplishing the task, and of his ability to meet those same difficulties.

"Eh bien! monsieur," one finally gets in edgewise, "to put in the tub, the wash-basin, and the water-heater, how much?"

"Ah, Madame!" he exclaims with a shrug, "how can I tell you now? I will study the question and send you an estimate."

"To-morrow?"

"Mon Dieu! Madame! It is impossible! My architect will make the estimate, and he will come and submit it to you. . . ." Here he hesitates—while he glances again over the conditions, again shrugs his shoulders, talks to himself in monosyllables, and finally comes to a thoughtful stop. Then, brightening, and with an effusive gesture of the hands—often one over his heart, he declares that he realizes that Madame is in a hurry and that his architect will submit the estimate—early next week.

THE MAN IN YELLOW GLOVES

Some days later a man wearing yellow cotton gloves enters the apartment with the grave formality of a lawyer entrusted with the missing will in a melodrama, and presents a document composed of many pages written in a fine copper-plate hand—as neat and precise as the record book in a bank—filled with endless, minute details, and ending in an astonishingly big sum total.

Paperers, painters, gas fitters, and electricians will each submit a similar document. It is far more than an estimate, it is almost a novelette or a three-act play in length, and, without forewarning, one will accept the sum total of the estimate upon the spot, and this once done, payment will have to be made. It is, therefore, a great mistake to accept the estimate without due and prolonged consideration, for it is generally nearly one third more than the work is worth.

The way to deal with contractors in Paris is to select paper, tub, gas fittings, and so forth, and order the work to be done, remembering specifically to forget to ask the price. The work is done rather slowly, unless the workmen are watched, but it is, nevertheless, done well. The French are conscientious workmen; they build slow, but they build well, and with a care in regard to details which is rarely known in America. Even the plumber considers himself an artist, and he usually is. The electrician often wears his hair long; he dresses in corduroys and adds, as a last touch, a flamboyant black cravat. He somehow considers himself a scientist—often close to a savant in his line.

USUALLY "OUT TO LUNCH"

French workmen always arrive late in the morning—leave at ten o'clock for a glass of wine and a bite to eat, leave again at eleven thirty for their lunch, and remain, chatting over their cigarettes and coffee, for an hour. At four o'clock they again depart for a glass of wine and something to eat, and the day ends at six. Many of the workmen have fine voices, and much singing, talking, and whistling goes on during working hours. The workmen joke each other, pass compliments to the maids, and if left alone, often indulge in a little game of cards. When the work is finally finished, the workmen expect a fee which usually varies from sixty cents to a dollar each.

One does not ask for bills; they come in due time—three or four months after the work is completed, for there is always a year in which to pay them. As a preliminary to their payment a man comes and measures carefully how many square meters of painting have been done—he takes off his gloves to do it—and how many square meters of paper have been glued. Another man comes to verify the measures taken by the first man,

A Husband's Story

"I had a conception of what my wife would be like, and oddly enough my ideal wife was the counterpart of the girl at home."

"And oddly too, the girl, to whom I never spoke of sentiment, is the only woman of whom my wife was ever seriously jealous."

"IT was the night of our silver wedding. 'Jim', said my wife, her voice a little tense, 'Jim—if you had it to do all over, would you?'"

A Husband's Story is the answer—the answer of a husband who dares to tell the truth. It's the man's side of the case, the side that isn't told. Incidentally, it is a revelation of the masculine, and a powerful argument for matrimony. In the May American Magazine there's a chapter of it—published anonymously. When you've read it you'll understand why.

GEORGE FITCH

George Fitch said there were a hundred automobiles in Homeburg. Then he admits he was wrong. "There are ninety-nine automobiles and one car. The Payleys own the car. They bought it in New York with a chauffeur thrown in, and they have been under his thumb ever since. He's the one chauffeur in captivity in Homeburg." The Auto Game in Homeburg is Fitch at his very best. If you own a car—or an automobile, or a machine—read it, and rejoice.

BAMBY

Every now and then a story comes along, so sparkling, so fresh and smiling and springlike, that you gather to yourself a bit of its sunshine and shed it on the world about in pure gladness. Bamby is that kind. If you would be thrilled and bewitched; if you are grumpy or bored or tired o' life and blue; if you would laugh and cry and fall in love (really, for once!) and live—Read Bamby. Meet Bamby! Take her home in your pocket. She's in—and finally one receives a series of the most amazing documents—the bill. There are big sheets of foolscap paper, often fifteen or twenty of them. One's name is written in round-hand on top, and the headlines are done in back-hand—the bill is altogether an imposing affair to look upon and a most astonishing account to read. The narrative of simply putting up a pipe for a gas fixture, taken from one of my own bills, reads word for word as follows:

A PARISIENNE—TEMPORARILY

For turning off the gas meter	0. francs, 25 centimes (5 cents)
For unscrewing and taking away the pulley piece	0.30 centimes
For taking away a gas pipe joint	0.17 "
For unsoldering the aforesaid joint	0.22 "
For taking off a gas bracket	0.03 "
For filling in the hole made by the gas bracket	0.04 "
To put back the bracket ..	0.31 "
For furnishing nails to put back the bracket..	0.23 "
For making holes in the bracket for nails	0.26 "
For taking away a gas pipe	0.30 "
Putting back the gas pipe	0.50 "
For hooks to hold gas pipe and putting in the hooks	0.13 "
Starting the gas meter for trial	0.25 "

So the statement goes on for many pages, amounting to a total, let us say, of fifty francs (ten dollars).

When all the bills have come in, an architect is sent for, who in turn sends a "vérificateur." The "vérificateur" is a man whose sole duty it is to correct the bills that are always made, say twenty per cent., higher than they ought to be, as the contractors know they will be cut down. Every year a regular price is given out by the Builders' Association as to the cost of everything—from a square meter of paint to the putting up of a foot of piping—and there is no disputing these prices; they have been issued by the Builders' Association, and they are legal. It is the business of the vérificateur to know these prices, and he is an expert at knowing them.

RED-INKING THE BILL

If the work which has been done is important, the vérificateur calls the head man of the house who contracted to do it to the spot where the work was done and goes carefully over what has been done by each workman. If the work is unimportant the vérificateur does not even see it, but with red ink he underscores each item and corrects the price, cutting here one centime, here seven, or there some francs. Next to the total amount given by the painter he puts in red ink, "Settlement=So Much," with the name of the architect. In this way the bill is often reduced from twenty to thirty or forty per cent., according to the dishonesty of the contractor. If the tenant is a stranger, who has no idea a vérificateur can be called, the contractor does not hesitate to take advantage of his ignorance.

When the verified bills are returned from the architect, one writes to the firms that have been dealt with, saying, for example, as follows: "Your bill of October 5, amounting to 900 francs, has been adjudged by the architect to be 560 francs. If you accept this, please call and receive payment on such and such a date." They always accept; no one dares dispute the figures of the architect, who receives for his fee five per cent. of the price he estimates the work to be worth. This law applies to all kinds of work except that of upholsterers, who are exempt from vérification.

Everywhere in Paris a tenant has to furnish gas and electric fixtures, which are taken away when he leaves; gas pipes papered over or painted belong to the house; unpapered or unpainted they belong to the tenant.

If the tenant puts in a bathroom, she furnishes everything—tub, basins, faucets, and so forth—which belong to her when she leaves. Should the proprietor allow her to put in a bathroom, or any other improvement, then it may be left when the lease is up, but if anything is put in without the consent of the proprietor it must be taken out and the apartment restored to its original condition ere she departs.

A BATHROOM IS A WHITE ELEPHANT

In a small apartment in the Latin Quarter, I had a bathroom installed in a little washroom. The thing was compact, and well done, yet my landlord, who was practical, said to me when I was leaving, "Madame, most tenants won't care for the bathroom. They will prefer space, but if your successor wishes to keep it, then I will allow you to leave it. If he doesn't I must ask you to take everything away, and put the room as it was before, without pipes."

I then asked the janitor to write to the next tenant who had taken my apartment to come and see me. He came. He was to be married, and was to move in with his bride. He was employed by the gas company, wore a pale blond beard, a dull silk hat, checked trousers, tan shoes, and yellow cotton gloves, and was most polite.

"Monsieur," I said, "it is about the bathroom; I have installed it myself, but rather than take everything away I will let you have it for very little."

"Ah Madame!" he declared, opening wide his arms, "what would we do with it?"

"Bathe," I meekly suggested.

"Oh!" he exclaimed. "Of course, one might, but bathing is sometimes dangerous, and it is giving up room for a thing one uses rarely. . . ."

"Maybe your fiancée might like it," I ventured.

"I don't think so," he answered in an offended tone, as though I had suggested that his fiancée was eccentric. "However, I will ask her, and let you know, Madame."

The outcome was that they consented to let it remain for nothing if I would leave the apartment before the fifteenth of the month, thus permitting them to be married sooner. When a great doctor told me afterwards that from accurate statistics they average in France one bath a year for each person, I readily believed him.

ACQUIRING THE BARGAINING HABIT

Once the apartment is rented and decorated there comes the question of furnishing it. If one intends to remain in Paris a long time, or to take the furniture away upon leaving, it is worth while buying new or fine old furniture. Either of these types of furniture is, of course, expensive, but most strangers who come to Paris to live—among these are many artists and students who do not intend to stay more than one, two, or three years—wish to furnish a little apartment as inexpensively as possible. To ac-

LONDON A-FLUTTER WITH TUNICS

THE rumor is that London is to be swept by an epidemic of scallops and points and rose-petaled tunics, and one could not but think there was something in this exaggerated view when one sat in the stalls of Lucile's fascinating little theatre at her opening recently and looked upon the gowns. There is, by the way, more pure enjoyment to be obtained from looking at such picked beauties, gyrating in modulated movement, after an effective entrance through soft-toned green curtains, than in listening to futurist music, and no one ever regrets turning down Scriabin for Lucile.

TUNICS, TUNICS, AND AGAIN TUNICS

The long tunic was the pièce de résistance of the collection, pointed and scalloped when of tulle or taffeta, and plain and flaring when of serge or cloth. Layer upon layer of white, filmy, frosty nothingness built into a tunic was in one case an excuse for calling a gown an "incarnation of snow." Each point of the many tiered tunic was touched with crystal, and nothing more exquisitely girlish could be imagined. For another pointed tunic of shaded petunia pink, white satin formed the foundation, and the belt above it showed the black and white stripes which Lucile has introduced this season, crossed by two blue bands and turned over with a touch of Metternich green at the top. The head-dress with this costume was quaint and charming and included one of the short tulle veils which are another pet vagary of to-day, in the shade of Parma violets.

A glorious Venetian costume of silver threaded brocade was worn by a statuesque brunette and dedicated to "Lazlo." Long sleeves of the brocade extended to the wrist and completed the effect of its being a veritable "picture" gown. To all the dancing frocks trailing scarfs added length of line, and gorgeous bits of color they were, suggestive of Bakst and the ballet.

Among the conspicuous novelties were the sleeveless bodices which appeared on every afternoon gown. They were well cut in from the shoulder to display a long-sleeved underblouse of chiffon of the same color. Of course, these are a welcome concession to the eye, for with the sleeveless evening frock so much in favor, it is necessary to preserve the same narrow shoulder-line during the day, if the impression made is to be consistent.

WOMAN ACHIEVES EQUAL POCKETS

All the serge tailored suits displayed the manly pocket, and aroused enthusiasm over a new sort of convenience. When she can rattle loose change with the ease and nonchalance of her brother, woman will surely feel she has at last come into her own.

Miss Ina Claire was one of the most eager spectators at this display of gowns, and consulted earnestly with her pretty mother. They both seemed impressed with the charms of a blue-gray shot taffeta coat and skirt. It is Lucile who is responsible for the gowns of this popular American girl who has so endeared herself to the hearts of London musical comedy devotees.

compish this end two things may be done. All furniture, except bedding, of course, can be rented of the so-called antique shops, or if there is time to hunt among the little, real, out-of-the-way antique shops, charming pieces of furniture may be bought for little money; far less, in fact, than must be paid for plain, new whitewood pieces. While a plain, new kitchen cupboard will cost at least $30, a beautiful, old, solid, dark-oak Normandy armoire, carved and with steel or brass hinges, may be purchased for $20. However, it takes time and patience to acquire that habit—unknown in America—the bargaining habit. A dealer in antiques never expects to receive the price he asks, and what a surprised man he would be if he did receive it!

He asks, let us say, two hundred francs for a table. One offers him one hundred and twenty, although willing to pay one hundred and fifty. "Ah!" he exclaims, "Madame is laughing surely. I would lose on it. It cost me one hundred and eighty francs. I sell it as cheap as two hundred because I need the room in my store."

LINGER DIPLOMATICALLY AT THE DOOR

One must let him talk, and finally, when there is a chance to put in a word, may reply, "I understand very well, but that is all I can pay. It is too bad. I will try elsewhere to find something cheaper." Then one should turn to go, but not too quickly, stopping rather to admire this and that on the way to the door, with many a "Thank you, monsieur." As one turns an indifferent back and rattles the handle of the door, a voice says, "Well, if Madame will give me one hundred and eighty francs I will sacrifice all ideas of profit to get the room."

"I am sorry," must be the quiet answer, "it is more than I wish to pay."

Then comes much praise of the table, its quality, its solidity, its beauty.

"Yes, I know," is the proper reply, as one opens the door, "but I must try to find one more to my price."

IN FRIENDSHIP FOR MADAME

Nine times out of ten the dealer steps out in the street and declares with such sincerity that it sounds almost true, "I can not bear to have Madame go without that table. It would really pain me to feel that Madame would miss such a splendid opportunity. I would truly feel deeply disappointed to think Madame would have to buy a cheap table, so let us halve the difference and it is yours."

One agrees and gives the address, but never pays until the purchase is received in good condition, repaired or polished, as the case may be. After a while the shopper grows hardened to the wiles of French tradespeople. Bargaining is an annoying process, but it must be gone through with, unless one prefers to be cheated. So with a little time and patience an apartment may be furnished as Parisians furnish theirs, most attractively and for comparatively little money.

by the blouse sketched at the upper right of page 64. Ordinarily a blouse priced as low as this one is a careless copy in poor materials of a more expensive model, but this simple blouse is of a good quality of voile, and is hemstitched, and finished with white bone buttons. It is well-cut and well-finished, and the model is one that is selling in many shops at several times the price of the copy illustrated.

A TRINITY OF WAISTS

A smart silk blouse is shown at the upper left of this page. It is made of either striped or cross-barred silk, and has one of the new, white linen collars, hand-fagoted, and stiffly laundered. The hand-fagoting is a clever touch, for if the collar were fagoted by machine the blouse would undoubtedly be noticeably cheapened; so original, imported collars have been used on the blouses made here in America. The tie is of black moire silk, and the collar may be worn either as shown in the large drawing or in the small one at the right of it.

A charming blouse model is the soft one illustrated at the upper right. This is of a new, delightfully fine, imported voile which is made in the loveliest of shades, in rose, tango, emerald, maize, flesh pink, and in white. The exquisitely fine collar and cuffs, and the little chemisette are of organdy, and the top collar and the cuffs are delicately embroidered. The line of the yoke and, in fact, the entire design of the blouse, are quite unusual and very attractive.

For general morning, tennis, or similar wear the blouse shown in the middle of the page would be difficult to improve upon. It is of an excellent quality of white Japanese tub silk and is finished with hemstitching.

A PRACTICAL NOVELTY

Quite a novel idea, and a sensible one as well, is shown in the clothes protector illustrated in the middle of page 64. It may be made of any material, but as shown here it is of cretonne. In the top and bottom are straight rods of wood, and between these are two rows of camphor balls enclosed in wire netting. The protector is closed down the front. There is space between the two covers for at least two garments. Not only is such a protector ideal for hanging away winter clothes and furs, but it is also excellent, minus the camphor, for protecting gowns and suits.

WHAT A MAN SHOULD WEAR

MR. C. L. H.:—May I ask you to state for me the correct dress for all ordinary occasions?

Ans.—In the morning, a man should wear a sack coat, waistcoat, and trousers of either light or heavy-weight material according to the season—cheviots, serges, flannels, and so forth—high turnover collar, dark four-in-hand tie, black or tan boots, tan or gray gloves, derby or dark brown felt hat.

In the afternoon, he should wear a black cutaway coat and waistcoat (a waistcoat with a narrow white piqué edging) with dark gray-striped trousers, dark four-in-hand tie, gray castor gloves, black boots—preferably patent leather—dark overcoat, silk hat, and walking-stick. This costume may be worn at the most ceremonious afternoon function. In fact, it is the accepted form of dress even for a bridegroom.

In the evening, a man should wear a dress coat and trousers of black worsted, with white piqué, three-button waistcoat, full-bosomed white linen shirt with pearl studs, wing collar, plain white bow tie, black silk or lisle socks, patent leather pumps, dark overcoat, silk hat, gray suède gloves outdoors, and white gloves indoors. He should avoid plaited shirts, gray ties and waistcoats, colored socks, kid shoes, fold collars, opera hats, and fancy handkerchiefs. Absolute simplicity is the sign of good taste.

FOR A "BAL MASQUE"

MRS. G. P.:—Have you any attractive or unusual patterns of dominos?

Ans.—One of the newest dominos is a Pierrot costume with large, baggy trousers or divided skirt, tunic, and pointed cap. In this one can be disguised and yet cover a frock and coiffure without damage.

These costumes are made in black, white, or any color of satin that fancy dictates, and are usually covered with designs of stars, moons, and so forth, cut in a contrasting shade of paper and pasted on. The mask usually matches the paper designs.

We should be very pleased to cut such a pattern if you wish it and will send your measurements.

A CHARITY BALL

MRS. F. R. S.:—Will you kindly give me suggestions for a charity ball to be given by a chapter of the D. A. R.?

Ans.—Just now as costume balls are much in favor, it is a simple matter to get up a successful charity ball. At present it is the fashion in such balls to have all the costumes of the same period.

An attractive and novel way of opening a ball of this sort is to have professional dancers enter in sedan chairs or gondolas and dance the first dance by themselves. Such a feature could, moreover, be advantageously advertised.

P. P. C. CARDS

MRS. O. D. H.:—When one is about to leave a city to make her home elsewhere is it customary to send P. P. C. cards for herself and her husband?

Ans.—When friends have entertained one, it is courteous to make farewell calls to explain that one is going away, and to extend the hospitality of the future home in case these friends are in that part of the world at any time.

To those with whom one has only a calling acquaintance, it is customary to send P. P. C. cards, with the personal cards. It is correct always to enclose one's husband's card, otherwise it is inferred that a separation is pending.

WHITE FACING FOR A WIDOW'S HAT

MRS. E. A. W.:—Does a white crêpe facing in a widow's hat lighten the conventional first mourning?

Ans.—In England, where the rules of conventional mourning are most strictly observed, it is considered in perfect taste to wear a narrow, white crêpe hat-facing at once. In America many women wear it immediately, though others wait until after the funeral. It is used not to lighten mourning, but to distinguish the widow's hat from other mourning hats.

ART NOTES

NOT in many seasons has New York had the opportunity of enjoying so many exhibitions showing engraving in all its branches. It is not only the works of master artists of former times which have been exceptionally well represented in these exhibitions; many modern engravers also have shown what is being done in this field at the present day. Among the modern works viewed in the past month was a collection of dry-point portraits of exceptional charm and of a technique both firm and exquisitely delicate, which was shown by Miss Mathilde de Cordoba at the galleries of Goupil and Company from March 16 to April 4. Though Spanish by descent and French in her art training, Miss de Cordoba was born in New York, and her work is already familiar to many American art lovers, as it has been exhibited here in previous years and is quite extensively represented in the splendid print collection of the Congressional Library in Washington.

CHILD PORTRAITS IN DRY-POINT

The exhibition at the Goupil Galleries comprised twenty-four portraits, which were nearly all portraits of children, for childhood is to Miss de Cordoba the most delightful theme for the etcher. Lady Gatty, a keen and interesting portrait, and Dowager Lady Colthurst, a work which offered proof that Miss de Cordoba's sympathetic understanding includes old age as well as childhood, were among the few grown-ups who found place among these works.

Many of the child portraits were printed in colors which were pleasingly and effectively used. "Boy Blue," the son of Sir Robert Chancellor, Governor of Mauritius, so-called from the color of his suit of Kate Greenaway cut, is an enchanting incarnation of the spirit of childish mischief—a spirit which also lurks in the eyes of "Toby, son of Lord Hylton." Master Hoag, on the other hand, is an incarnation of wide-eyed, childish seriousness. This portrait is half-length, seen against a landscape background, with a sky of soft, clear blue. The interesting balancing of light and dark, and the skill with which the texture of the hair is rendered are things worthy of note. Hair is a matter of particular interest with Miss de Cordoba, as one perceives readily from her work, and she deplores the American "Dutch cut," which clips away half her joy and covers the rest with a huge, uninteresting, ribbon bow. Two very decorative works are the portrait of Miss Jean Farquhar in most picturesque costume as the Good Fairy in "The Long-Nosed Princess" (a children's play given this winter at the home of Mrs. Benjamin Guinness), and a study of a child with a bunch of grapes, called "L'Enfant aux Raisins," framed in the tendrils of the grape-vine. This is printed in color and is the most purely decorative work in the exhibition.

The two pictures illustrated here show the remarkable range in technique, from the exquisite delicacy of lines which barely touch the plate in "The Dutch Cap," to the depth and richness of the hair, which is yet full of light, in "Her First Portrait." Miss de Cordoba will remain in New York until August, as she has many portraits under way.

LANDSCAPE ETCHINGS AND BRONZES

The exhibition at the Goupil Galleries also included twenty-five landscape etchings, printed in color, by Zella de Milhau, and thirty-one bronzes by Rembrandt Bugatti. Miss de Milhau's work shows great promise, though one feels that it has not as yet reached its full development. The bronzes of Rembrandt Bugatti, with the exception of "The Apple Woman," are all studies of animals or birds. The most striking is that representing a long line of work horses attached to a heavily loaded wagon. The moment when the animals are stopped stands, and a small one modeled with keen insight, and a group of penguins are other bronzes worthy of note.

PAINTINGS BY ORPEN

One of the most interesting exhibitions of the past month was that of the work of William Orpen, an Englishman sometimes hailed as the successor of Sargent in the portrait field, which was held at the Knoedler Galleries from March 23 to April 4. Twenty-six works of decided originality and strength, without pose or affectation, were shown in this exhibition. The colors were fresh, clear, pleasing, and free from the monotony which marks so many one-man exhibitions. Portrait, landscape, interior, and nude study were all treated with freshness of interest and an evident pleasure in the work.

Among the finest of these works were two portraits of Lady Rocksavage, one a three-quarter-length figure with a decorative costume and background, the other, a half-length picture of absolute simplicity, with a spirited and aristocratic dignity suggesting the work of Van Dyck. A novel treatment was adopted in the portrait of Mrs. Howard St. George, which shows Mrs. St. George in a gown of the rich material which Orpen loves to paint, reclining in a gracefully relaxed pose on a sofa at the foot of a great, carved, four-post bed in a dim interior full of rich color.

"The Irish Volunteer" shows a girl of the black-haired, blue-eyed, Irish beauty type, clad in a buff and gold Irish uniform which stands out against a background of intense blue, a most skillful placing of the figure against this striking background, a telling balancing of the black hair and the black, plumed hat on the arm, and an absence of any superficial prettiness in the painting make this work as delightful as it is unusual.

To those keenly interested in art, the vital interest shown in the formation of any new association of artists can not fail to be of moment. There is, however, justifiable ground for expecting that any new association shall stand for some definite principle which is not fully represented in bodies already in existence. If the big exhibitions are to be considered merely as sales galleries on a large scale, then any increase in the number of these exhibitions must be commendable. If, however, the important associations have in view the advancement of the art of painting and the presentation to the public of the most important works executed during the year in the various fields of painting or in accordance with the theories of various schools, it would seem that the formation of any new society should be justified by its ability to present some type of work or some theory of color, technique, or the like, not fairly represented in other exhibitions.

Such justification is not apparent in the exhibition at the Municipal Gallery by the Allied Artists of America, an association in which a large number of the members are also members of the National Academy of Design. Throughout the hundred and twenty-three works of this exhibition, it would be difficult to find one which would cause a moment's surprise if seen on the walls of the National Academy. Men whose work has long been familiar on Academy walls seem equally familiar here, and there are comparatively few canvases signed with names which have not at one time or another figured in Academy catalogues.

An idea both novel and entertaining has been carried out by the Modernist Studios, which on April 20 opened an exhibition of carefully selected horrors from the age when tidies, ball fringe, plush furniture, hand-painted pebbles, and wax flowers were among the cherished ornaments of the home. A consideration of this collection of the decorative sins of our forefathers—or mothers—should assuredly convince the most captious that no extreme of the most advanced extremist will ever equal the serene banality which overspread the English-speaking world during the reign of that good queen, Victoria of England, and which William Morris, Ruskin, and their fellows spent a lifetime combating. Great care was used in the selection of these household furnishings, and their intrinsic bad taste is guaranteed by a jury of selection including such recognized authorities as Miss Elsie de Wolfe, Mr. Albert Herter, and Mr. Oliver Herford, which has rigidly excluded all articles in which a remnant of taste or artistic feeling might be discerned.

rule, showed that the spirit of the new art had at least knocked at his studio door, even if not convincingly. Leopold Seyffert's "Tired Out" owes more than its subject to Holland, but is a fine and serious piece of work. William M. Chase's "Portrait of Professor T. U. Taylor" was as capable as his inevitable still life. Cecilia Beaux's "Portrait," awarded the Saltus Medal, was disappointing, treated literally, almost photographically, and with absolute coldness. Ivan G. Olinsky with "Confidences" won the Thomas B. Clarke Prize. The reason for this painter's present popularity must rest in the sweet inconsequence of his point of view. If he shocks us at all, he shocks us by bringing back an old friend, forgotten with the lapse of years, a mid-Victorian type of romance in which are sweet people and a sweet theme. Since Degas, the ballet in paint has whirled around the truths he told for the first time. In "The Visitor," Louis Kronberg continues the whirl which has now become conventional. But while he has studied Degas he has not, with the French master, paid particular heed to life. Any modern, such as George Bellows for example, would have handled Thomas Eakins' prize-fight picture with so much emphasis that, astounded by the strength of the presentment, we should have missed the vulgarity of the fact. Mr. Eakins, however, has omitted nothing; he has given us the full fact without accent or excitement, and, despite the conservative refinement of his language, he presents the full vulgarity of his subject. M U S I C

WITH the closing of the Century Opera House accomplished and that of the Metropolitan imminent, one of the busiest musical seasons in the annals of New York is nearing its end, somewhat earlier and somewhat more swiftly than had been anticipated. Ever since the beginning of the year there have been rumors that the box-office receipts of the house devoted to opera in English did not quite measure up to expectations, rumors which can hardly be dismissed as absurd in view of the rapidly diminishing attendance. In making announcement that the season would be shortened by a whole month, however, all reference to matters financial was avoided.

ENLARGING THE CENTURY OPERA HOUSE

"After conferences with architects and contractors" the announcement read, "the Board of Directors of the Century Opera Company has decided to have the extensive alterations planned for the purpose of increasing the seating capacity, begun on the Century Opera House on April 20, in order to be certain of having the house ready to open on September 14."

The changes in the Century Opera House will include an extension forward of the first and second balconies to make room for several extra rows of 50- and 25-cent seats; a complete remodeling of the "foyer circle," which will double its capacity, and radical alterations on the orchestra floor. The entire concrete foundation of the parquet is to be replaced by a floor laid at a pitch less steep than the present one. The semi-circle of rooms at the back, coat rooms, press room, telephone room, offices, and ushers' rooms, are to be torn out so that the orchestra floor may be extended backward twenty or thirty feet. The new plans provide for six boxes at the sides instead of in the middle of what is now the orchestra circle. At present, the Century Opera House has seats for 2,100 persons. Next season more than a thousand additional chairs are to be installed; an arrangement which, it is announced, will make it one of the largest opera houses in the United States.

"L'AMORE MEDICO"

As the revival of "Carmen" was postponed to next autumn, the American premiere of Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari's "L'Amore Medico" was the last important production of the season in the Metropolitan Opera House. It can hardly be said, however, that the new work made a deep impression, though the performance, with Toscanini as conductor and Lucrezia Bori and Bella Alten in the two principal feminine parts, closely approached perfection. Truth to tell, however, this cunningly wrought score—a little masterpiece in construction—appeals to musicians rather than to laymen.

The music of "L'Amore Medico," in which Wolf-Ferrari has mingled the archaic and the modern with extraordinary dexterity and resource, but with a far more liberal use of chromatic progressions and dissonances than in his earlier work, is almost without flaw in design and construction. The recitatives, ariosos, and concerted numbers not only are models of their kind but are fashioned in such a way as to fit perfectly into the whole. With the possible exception of the rather tiresome dialogues of the second act there are no awkward points, no moments when the flow of the exquisitely orchestrated score is interrupted. Yet every thematic thread, every harmonic modulation, every instrumental color, has a strangely familiar aspect which brings reminders of Verdi, of Gluck, Bach, Handel, of Rossini, of Beethoven, Wagner, Humperdinck, Richard Strauss, and others.

One of the most remarkable features of "L'Amore Medico" is the small number of themes. Scarcely more than half a dozen distinct melodic ideas, some of which bear a strong family resemblance to one another, can be discovered in these pages. The adroit composer has shaped, molded, and transformed his motives with the utmost skill, changing their superficial aspect at every turn, altering their rhythmic character, and presenting them in constantly shifting harmonic and instrumental guise. Yet, despite his cleverness, the frequent reiteration of the same melodic intervals grows somewhat wearisome.

Happily this program was not as long as some of this pianist's previous concerts. Not to disappoint any one who wanted more, however—and evidently many did—he added generously to the selections promised. After the first group, he played one of Beethoven's barcaroles; after the second, a walse and mazurka by Chopin, and at the end, in the manner of Paderewski, a string of encores for the throng who rushed to the front to watch his dancing fingers at close range.

NOVELTY BY RUBIN GOLDMARK

A new tone-poem, "Samson," by Rubin Goldmark, who himself sat in the audience, was produced for the first time in New York by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last Thursday evening, March 19, at the last concert to be given by it this season. The composer evidently made no attempt to compress his musical ideas into small compass. In the radiant altitudes of Colorado Springs and the sylvan seclusion of Keene Valley and in the Adirondack Mountains, he gave unhurried symphonic delineation to his biblical subject. Yet, while there are times when the inspiration seems to run rather low and when the composition sounds somewhat labored, the work as a whole is a dignified effort, with an instrumental investiture that reveals unusual skill, if no great originality of invention.

At both of the farewell concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Paderewski was the soloist, playing his own concerto in A minor on Thursday, and Beethoven's "Emperor" concerto on Saturday. Encores at symphony concerts are not considered quite the thing, but the management considerably placed Paderewski's selections at the end of the program and the generous Polish pianist gave on each occasion encores which amounted to a supplementary recital.

YON IN ORGAN RECITAL

To Pietro A. Yon, organist at St. Xavier's Church, fell the honor of giving, on March 24, the first organ recital in Aeolian Hall. The young Italian musician established a standard that is likely to remain unapproached for some time, for Mr. Yon is master of his instrument. He not only has command of technique, as was shown by the whirling finale of de la Tombe's "Sonata No. 2," and in a concert study of his own, in which there is a rapidly moving bass that keeps the feet in constant movement on the pedals, but he also brings to his interpretations vigor, temperament, animation, and a rhythmical energy and precision rare among players of the organ.

KATHERINE GOODSON

At her recital in Carnegie Hall on the evening of March 24, Katherine Goodson, the pianist, played the following selections:

I

- Vier Klavierstücke Op. 119....Brahms*
- Intermezzo in B minor*
- Intermezzo in E minor*

CONCERTS OF RUSSIAN AND FOLK MUSIC

It was no small undertaking on the part of Kurt Schindler to produce at the concert of the Schola Cantorum, on Wednesday evening, April 2, the interesting folk-lore program he had arranged for the occasion—a program bristling with more or less unfamiliar music ranging from the plantation songs of the American south to music first heard on the steppes of Russia. But he accomplished his task in a way that brought honor to his excellent chorus and reflected much credit on his skill as a chorus-master.

The following program was given:

PART I

1. Rimsky-Korsakoff:
Sadko. Tableau musical. Orchestra.
2. Moussorgsky:

5. Moussorgsky:

(b) The Plaint of the People. From the opera "Khovantchina." (First Time.) Chorus, baritone solo, and orchestra.
6. Rubetz:

PART II

NEGRO COMPOSERS AND MODERN ENGLISH CHORAL BALLADS BASED ON FOLK-SONGS

7. Coleridge-Taylor:
The Slave Singing at Midnight. ("Thus he sang the Song of David.") The poem by Longfellow. (First time in New York.) Chorus and orchestra.
8. Burleigh:

(b) Father and Daughter. A ballad of the Far-O'er-Islands, for five men's solo voices, double chorus, and orchestra. (New.)

Russian music has not been neglected this season in New York, and an especially interesting program was given by the choir of the Russian Cathedral of St. Nicholas, under the direction of choir-master Gorokhoff, at their concert of Friday evening, March 27, in Aeolian Hall.

FOR PARTICULAR PERSONS

Summer vacationists when contemplating a trip to the country, seashore, or mountains often find that the thought of how to properly transport their clothes becomes a bugbear.

Past experience with ordinary trunks has taught them that their clothes become so creased, crumpled and crushed that much of their original beauty is lost forever. It was with a view to obviating all these troubles that we originated the

PARKHURST WARDROBE TRUNK

Fifty years manufacturing every kind of trunk put us in a preeminent position to do this. Our large up-to-date factory enabled us to prepare many models, and thus test out every possible convenience and idea. In our present trunk we embody those features, which were finally approved and patented.

We now present this trunk as being the one Wardrobe trunk which will transport to any distance, and preserve in perfect condition, every garment or article needed by even the most particular person.

We make these trunks on honor, and sell them on their determined merits. We only ask that you will allow us to send you one for personal examination and approval in your own home.

The Diminishing Dollar

The dollars you get are just as large as they ever were, but they are smaller in purchasing power than ever before. The problem is how to make a dollar go as far as possible in purchasing the necessities of life. For a dollar you can get one hundred and that means a hundred wholesome, nourishing breakfasts. If you add coffee, milk and a little cream, a deliciously strengthening and satisfying Shredded Wheat breakfast should not cost over five cents. Shredded Wheat Biscuit is the whole wheat prepared in digestible form. It is ready-cooked and ready-to-serve.

Always heat the Biscuit in the oven to restore crispness. For breakfast serve with hot milk and a little cream, adding salt or sugar to suit the taste. Deliciously nourishing for any meal in combination with sliced bananas, baked apples, stewed prunes, or canned or preserved fruits. Triscuit is the Shredded Wheat wafer and is eaten as a toast with butter, cheese or marmalade.

A SUMMERY DISMISSAL of RUGS

When the Chintz of Summer Supersedes the Velvet of Winter, Oriental Rugs Give Place to Supplanters of Varied Material from American Cotton to Algerian Cocoa Fiber

THERE are few women who fail to find interest in plans for the redecoration and freshening of the house in spring. The treatment of the floors, an important part of any decorative scheme, is of especial interest in this spring freshening, for appropriate summer floor coverings differ from the heavy rugs of winter, even as chintz and muslin differ from the winter drapery stuffs. The evolution of the summer rug, "made in America," has been rapid during the last four or five years, and the best shops now display an assortment of cotton rugs in various textures and in soft colors that rival in beauty the cretonnes and other cotton fabrics that are so popular for summer draperies. The summer rugs which are imported are of an entirely different character from the American rugs. They are usually made of two thirds wool and are in darker colors. There are also imported rugs of grass, or of rushes woven into mats, for use upon piazzas, terraces, and lawns.

OF EUROPEAN MAKE

One good English "art rug" is made almost entirely of wool, but is light and pliable. It comes in large sizes, such as 9 by 12 feet, and is restful in color, having a soft, pale green background with a deep border all around, on which are pink roses and green leaves. Another rug of the same kind has the middle covered with a latticework design of darker green with climbing roses of dull pink.

The only imported rug that is made entirely of cotton is being shown by two of the best shops. It is an English rug, made of Egyptian cotton, and is unusually thick and soft. The ground is white, and is covered with a variety of pleasing patterns of garlands of flowers in natural colors, which are guaranteed sun-fast. At a short distance these rugs look like very fine cretonne. They come in sizes up to 4 by 7 feet. In the most faithful domestic copies they are very inexpensive.

COTTON RUGS FOR THE INDOORS

One of the best of the American cotton rugs comes in all sizes, and can be made to order to fit any room. The rugs of this type are not expensive; they have a soft, slightly rough surface, and they can be dry-cleaned without fading. The background is of solid color in gray, pink, blue, lavender, or any of the shades from tan and café au lait to brown. There are also very beautiful wine colors, a shade of crimson, and greens, light and dark. The rugs are oblong, and invariably the border has a ground of black or cream into which are woven patterns of flowers and leaves, or conventional designs. The black border gives character and striking effect in contrast to the solid color of the background. Looking at one of these rugs in a soft shade of light blue, one immediately visualizes a charming bedroom for a country house. With this rug covering the floor, with the walls of plain cream color, the furniture in white enamel combined with cane, and with slip covers and hangings of flowered cretonne to harmonize with the rug—how cool and fresh would be the effect! A novel cotton rug is the "cretonne rug," hand-crocheted from strips of flowered cretonne to give a curious dim, faded look which is rather attractive. It comes only in small sizes.

The rag rug has an extensive popularity in this country, and for certain purposes nothing has been found to take its place. Each year one finds an improvement in its manufacture, and at present most of the shops show a very superior rug of this kind, known as a braided wool rug. These are usually either oval or round, smooth, very firm, and compactly sewn. Faithfully copied from the rugs our grandmothers made, they are appropriately made in New England of carefully selected, fresh, clean wools in pleasing colors. They are fairly inexpensive when one considers that they are hand-made and very durable. They are also heavy enough to lie flat on the floor. An entire home in Massachusetts was recently fitted out with these rugs, which are well suited to Colonial furnishings and give an air of homeliness and simplicity. A braided rug 4 feet 1 inch by 2 feet 4½ inches costs $10.50. The prices of other sizes are in proportion.

MOTHER GOOSE AND HER GEES

Cotton braided rugs of a similar appearance are very reasonable in price—from $2.25 for the size 2 feet 6 inches in diameter, upward. They come in both light and dark colors. A new rug of the rag variety is most pleasing, largely because of the soft, velvety surface and the beauty of its coloring. Made in Japan, it is heavy and durable, and lies flat on the floor. A soft tan background striped in Roman effect with soft greens, blues, yellows, and other harmonizing tones makes a floor covering well suited to the country cottage. For children's rooms there are the rag rugs, called poster rugs, which have charming nursery borders, such as windmills, quaint cottages, and processions of geese. These rugs, made to order, are sold at prices ranging upward according to size from $2.50 for a rug 2½ by 5 feet.

Even more of a joy to the child heart, if possible, are the so-called wool art squares which may be ordered in almost any color with absorbing borders of processions of animals, evidently from the circus, as some of them are led by gay clowns. These may be ordered in any size. The 9-by-12-foot size costs $33.

The wonderful blind people make the finest sort of rag rug, with a heavy weave, in a mottled or plain background and charming borders of conventional designs. Not only are the colors good, but the designs are really unique—all the more admirable when one realizes how the work is done. They sell for from $5.50 for the 2½-by-5-foot size up to $45 for the 9-by-12-foot size. These blind weavers are particularly successful in doing work to order, and the results which they achieve when working for a particular decorative scheme are often very successful.

WOVEN OF GRASSES OR RUSHES

Despite the charm of the cotton rug, there are many persons who prefer to cover their floors with matting in hot weather. That there are certain advantages in the use of this standard floor covering is undeniable, as it solves the problem of the old-fashioned floor made of ordinary boards. Matting gives a delightfully smooth, unbroken surface, and the neutral color makes a good background for rugs of any color. It also gives an effect of coolness that is not obtained by even the lightest of cotton rugs. The finest and most closely woven

Excessive Perspiration

What causes it—how to correct it

That profuse perspiration which so often ruins lovely gowns, and is always embarrassing, is a condition easily corrected once you understand its cause.

Profuse perspiration is natural and healthy when it covers the entire body, as after vigorous exercise.

When, however, this condition is confined to certain parts of the body, as the arm pits, palms of hands, feet, etc., it is usually due to nervous over-stimulation of the sweat glands. Even very healthy persons may be troubled with this local condition.

In such cases you can, by proper local treatment, easily and harmlessly relieve this condition without affecting the natural, healthy perspiration of the body.

To meet this need for local treatment, ODO-RO-NO, the toilet water for excessive perspiration, was formulated.

Its action is mild, but immediately effective. It is unscented, but pleasant to use and harmless. It regulates the profuse perspiration and destroys all odor, leaving the part to which it is applied daintily clean, dry and aseptic.

Get ODO-RO-NO to-day and you will get complete relief from the troubles and embarrassment of excessive perspiration. 25c and 50c bottles at all drug and department stores, or direct from us, prepaid.

Send 6c in stamps and your dealer's name and we will send you a sample bottle of ODO-RO-NO by return mail. THE ODO-RO-NO CO., 948 Blair Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Le Chevalier d'Orsay, in addition to many other historic distinctions, was the Director of the renowned Beaux Arts, of Paris. As such, he was the supreme arbiter of his age in all matters affecting the elegancies of life.

D'Orsay perfumes are offered the American public in the confidence that they will be accepted as worthy of the name they bear.

"Leur Coeur" (Their Heart) is a new d'Orsay triumph. It is a blending of the fragrant hearts of many flowers—the very essence of their petals held captive in a perfume of rare distinction—that has captivated the elite Parisiennes. speed is accentuated by the Cohanesque device of slamming doors at entrances and exits. One actor dashes in as another dashes out, and nearly all the dialogue is spoken on the run. "A Pair of Sixes" is one of those "step lively" plays which are peculiarly American.

The first act is set in the office of the Eureka Digestive Pill Company, in New York City. There are two partners to this concern. Their names are George B. Nettleton and T. Boggs John. These men are old friends, but they are continually quarreling with each other. Each believes that the success of the concern is due solely to his own efforts and that the other is merely an encumbrance. They nearly tear their stenographer in two whenever they call simultaneously for her services, and they habitually give conflicting orders to their bookkeeper and their office-boy. Each of them has tried many times to buy the other out, but neither is willing to sell his interest in the business.

After having lost the custom of a very wealthy client and the services of their best salesman by wrangling at an ill-considered moment, they call up their lawyer and insist that he shall devise an equitable means of dissolving their partnership. Each of them maintains that the other is fit only to black his boots, and this exchange of courtesies gives the lawyer an idea. He suggests that a single hand of poker shall be dealt between the partners to determine a winner and a loser. The winner is to enjoy complete control of the business for a year, and throughout that period the loser is to act as his domestic servant. Furthermore, both parties must bind themselves to keep the terms of their agreement secret, under penalty of forfeiting five thousand dollars. Each of the partners bullies the other into accepting this fantastic contract. The cards are dealt, and Nettleton wins with a pair of sixes.

The two subsequent acts are set in the home of Nettleton, where his erstwhile partner, wearing the name of Boggs, is serving as a butler. The device of exhibiting a gentleman as a servant is, of course, traditional in farce, but Mr. Peple has developed it with apparent originality. Nettleton does everything he can to make Boggs uncomfortable, and finally hits upon the happy thought of inviting the latter's fiancée to dinner. By the terms of the contract, Boggs is prevented from explaining to this girl how he happens to be placed in such a degrading situation; but, after many misunderstandings, she succeeds in worming the secret out of the lawyer.

She now suggests to Boggs a way of making Nettleton as uncomfortable as himself. The butler is to pretend to make love to Mrs. Nettleton, and to comport himself as if he enjoyed his present life of leisure and adventure in Nettleton's home much more than his former life of labor in the office. This ruse succeeds so well that, in a short time, Nettleton is even more eager to break the contract than Boggs had been at the outset of the experiment. Now that both the partners are agreed that their former relation was preferable to their present status, the vivacious heroine calls their attention to the fact that their contract is illegal, since its terms were based on the outcome of a gambling game. Thereupon they dismiss their attorney as "a hell of a lawyer" and eagerly return to their former terms of partnership.

This farce is so ingeniously constructed, so humorously written, and so cleverly acted that it affords one of the most delightful entertainments of this entire season. The success of the piece was immediate, and thoroughly deserved.

"MARRYING MONEY"

"MARRYING MONEY," by Washington Pezet and Bertram Marburgh, just fails of being a successful farce. The authors started out with an adequate idea, but the piece is so constructed that the audience is permitted to forecast the entire action as soon as the first act is completed. All that is presented in the last two acts has been already discounted by anticipation, and the farce could have been improved if the authors had devoted more attention to the necessary element of surprise. Furthermore, the play is poorly cast and perfunctorily acted.

The scene of the first two acts is set at a summer hotel in Maine. The heroine is the daughter of a financier who is reputed to be wealthy but who has just lost his entire fortune in Wall Street. The hero is a distant cousin of a very wealthy family. He, too, is reputed to be rich but is actually penniless. Each of these young people decides that it is necessary to marry for money before the facts are known, and, with this purpose, each of them proceeds to woo the other. The girl is egged on by her mother, and the man is nerved to the endeavor by a couple of friends who desire to live upon his bounty. By their connivance the young couple are persuaded to elope. It is not until three days after their hasty marriage—when a large bill is presented to them at a country inn—that each of them discovers that the other is unable to pay it. But, meanwhile, they have fallen truly in love with each other, and, at the end of the play, a twist of circumstances endows them with sufficient capital to start life together on a working basis.

The pattern of mutual misunderstanding which was chosen as the basis for this farce is amusing in itself and should have been developed to a successful issue. "Marrying Money" is not a bad play, but it is one of those plays which are disappointing because they ought obviously to be better than they are. A greater technical expertness on the part of the authors and a livelier spirit in the acting and the stage-direction might easily have made this farce worth seeing.

exaggerations of an earlier epoch. The underskirt and jacket were of dark blue serge. The overskirt of black satin was tightly draped and drawn high in the back under a large loop and sash-end of satin. The coat had a godet flare and was cut slightly shorter in the back. It opened in the front over a blouse of white batiste, which was finely plaited and was girdled with black velvet in such a way that a two-and-a-half-inch frill of the batiste fell over the skirt.

At the moment, the smartest costumes are of dark blue serge or of black taffeta—always with a touch of white. A chic Chéruit frock worn at the Palais Persan by a fair tangoist one rainy afternoon was of black taffeta, with a tiny coat of white broadcloth embroidered in white. This is illustrated at the right of the upper drawing on page 38. Another very graceful dancer wore the frock of blue serge shown in the same sketch. Like all of the modish skirts these two were very short, and the underskirts were very narrow. On this same occasion I saw a Premet model with a long, semi-fitted waist, very similar to the one sketched and described in this letter. One Parisienne who wore a chic suit of blue serge wore with it canary colored gloves, with heavy black stitching.

THE WAISTCOAT BLOUSE

A new waistcoat blouse recently designed by one of the specialty shops is of piqué and linen batiste—a very practical blouse for a tailored suit. A drawing of it appears at the top of this page. The top of the blouse and the sleeves are of batiste; the lower part of blouse, which is cut like a waistcoat, is of white piqué, and so also are the cuffs and collar. Although the collar is worn with a mannish bow tie, the blouse is open at the neck in a deep V.

To give the essential touch of white, many varieties of flaring white collars are used with dresses and with suits. Occasionally coats are still collared and cuffed with fur, but fur never appears on any other part of the costume, though scarfs of it are worn and will continue to be worn as long as dresses remain as décolleté as they are at present.

As skirts have become wider, sleeves have become tighter. Dress-sleeves are set in at the normal armhole without a bit of fulness and fit the arm like the skin itself, as if imitating, in so far as possible, the evening dresses of no sleeves at all. They are so snug on the forearm that it is impossible to slip the hand through them, and they are all, therefore, made to fasten at the wrist.

Within the last two weeks hats, too, have grown so small and so severely plain that in some cases their only trimming consists of a small varnished flower and—the varnish on the straw! Bushy aigrettes or full tufts of paradise must be discarded, for they are no longer chic. Many of these little hats are trimmed with flowers which are sewed quite flat, and never by any chance is the stem allowed to show. When a hat of shiny black straw is dotted in this fashion with half-bloom roses, without any foliage, it looks as if the hat itself had burst into bloom. Foliage is rarely used in any combination and when it is it is always highly varnished. Now and then, conspicuous because of its contrast to these others, one sees a high-crowned sailor with a three-inch brim.

A dainty little etching by Drian accompanied Dœuillet's invitation to come and see his spacious new salons, and incidentally his new models for the spring season. And though the six famous couturiers of the Place Vendôme are not in the habit of serving tea at their openings, on this occasion tea was served, and floral decorations made a pretty background for the dainty frocks which were paraded by the manikins.

LUCILE TABOOES THE BUSTLE

Lucile has just shown her spring models. Among them all there is not the slightest suggestion of a bustle effect nor are the skirts very short. The silhouette remains much the same as it was last year, and although she uses many frills and tunics they are all so narrow and of such soft materials that they do not destroy the long, straight lines. Skirts of tulle ruffled in lace are worn with jaunty little peplum blouses or with coats of striped silk over the soft bodice of lace.

All her coats are snug at the shoulders,

Worried About Baby? Get Holstein Cow's Milk

How seldom the breast-fed baby causes any serious anxiety! But when it's necessary to find a substitute for Nature's food, trouble usually begins.

You can avoid all the worry and anxiety that usually accompanies the use of cow's milk, if you will take care to use Holstein milk, the very nearest thing to breast milk.

In Holstein milk, as in breast milk, there is only a moderate amount of cream (or butterfat) and it is in the form of small even globules that yield quickly to the action of the digestive fluids. The curds formed from Holstein milk are small, soft, flaky, and easy to digest.

In common milk the average fat globule is twice the size of those found in Holstein milk, and the curds formed are coarse, heavy, and likely to cling together in a solid mass.

You can easily see how much more suitable for infant feeding Holstein milk is, and why the great specialists agree in recommending it.

Holstein milk costs no more than ordinary milk. If you have any difficulty in securing it, write us.

Send for our free booklet, "The Story of Holstein Milk."

PARIS WILL BE PARIS

The Marigny Théâtre, which has adopted the plan of using fine modern sculpture in stage settings, recently honored America by the selection of this Salon group, "Woman and Dog," by Cecil Howard and have a ripple at the hips, which is accomplished either by a gradual flare from the shoulders or with a set-on ripple skirt. Some coats barely touch the hips, others cover the hips, and in almost every case the skirt is topped by a tunic which shows below the coat. Sometimes it is a single tunic which flares, and frequently there are three or four tunics which hang almost straight, the lowest just covering the hips and the uppermost barely touching the hips, but it is all so cleverly arranged that it does not destroy the slender silhouette.

THE PILL-BOX TURBAN

"La Corniche," an exceptionally pretty street suit of fawn colored velours de laine, is worn with a jaunty little pillbox turban of fawn colored picot straw.
It is set very low over the right eye and is tilted so high in the back that from the front one can see the whole top of the square crown and the rosette that is in the back. All of Lucile's hats are worn at this angle. She favors especially Niniche hats of straw, silk, or of very sheer lace, shirred on wires. These hats are oblong and scarcely wider than the head, so that even though the hair is brushed tightly back at the temples the brims do not project at all.

A DANCE VEIL FOR THE COQUETTE

Lucile has a quaint way of drawing a veil over the eyes; never, by any chance, does it cover the nose. She uses a veil not only with hats but with dancing frocks. With a dancing frock of pale pink taffeta, called "spectre de la rose," a veil of dark blue tulle is drawn over the forehead and eyes and tied in a perky little bow at the back of the head.
With an evening gown of pale blue chif-fon, there is worn a transformation that just matches the shade of the frock.

In street suits and afternoon frocks, Lucile shows a marked fondness for various shades of fawn, sable, noisette, and linden green. The parasols she offers have wonderfully long sticks. The most effective one was of white taffeta with stripes of black velvet running from the

matings on the market are the Japanese, inlaid matings. The new ones this spring seem curiously exotic to our western eyes, but are, nevertheless, lovely.
One piece which was made to order for one of the great country houses near New York has a pattern of sprays of pink flowers and green leaves at wide intervals. Another matting has a design of roses in faded pink. These matings are unusual, distinguished, and not inexpensive.

Many of the best imported summer rugs are intended for the piazza, and for use out of doors. They are to be had in endless variety, and are made in China, Holland, Belgium, and England.
The domestic rugs of this type are generally copies of the foreign ones; they have been manufactured in this country only during the last year or two. Of the two handsomest piazza rugs seen this spring, one is from Holland, and one from Belgium. The first is in extremely good taste and very striking. It is oval, square, or oblong, and it is made of closely braided, fine green grass. In the 8-by-10-foot size these rugs are $29.50;
in 6-by-9-foot size, $19.50.

The rug from Belgium was made to order for one of the large shops in New York. The design is typically American, and is a copy of the Navajo blanket. This rug which is 9 by 12 feet, is made of Algerian cocoa fiber dyed a superb crimson, and has the Indian design woven into it in black. Nothing could be bolder or more arresting to the eye than this glorious bit of color, and it would look extremely well with dark green wicker furniture with crimson cushions. The Navajo design is also woven in black on rugs of green, brown, and tan.

Excellent for porch use are the very heavy Holland rush rugs. Oblong, well colored, impervious to sun or water, stain-proof, and very substantial, these flat-braided rugs, which are woven with an attractive, narrow black border, are popular and inexpensive.

Quite the finest porch rugs shown are the Algerian and the Mourzouk rugs which come in varicolored, very bold designs on a plain brown background.
In the Mourzouk rugs Chinese patterns predominate. They are made of very heavy cocoa fiber and are particularly durable and also reversible. They come in sizes 6 by 9, 9 by 12, and 12 by 15 feet. Nothing could be finer for out-of-door use than these rugs.

“Do You Know Vanity Fair?”

ONCE, long ago, people had leisure enough to read separate magazines of the Stage, and of Art, and of Outdoor Sport, and of Humor, and of Literature—and so on, ad infinitum!

Nowadays, when nobody has time for anything like that, you will find that Vanity Fair is six magazines in one—

It is a review of everything new and good on the Stage, and in Music and the Opera.

It is an illustrated newspaper of amateur Sport, including Golf, Tennis, Polo, Racing, Yachting, Football.

Also a timely and authoritative review of the tendencies in Literature, and in the fiction of the day.

A journal of the best in Art, both classic and contemporary, giving much space to the work of our younger artists.

A Fashion magazine presenting the best Paris and New York styles.

Why the Vacuna Portable Cleaner is Superior to the Installed Plant

It cleans more thoroughly and quickly than is possible with a central plant installation. It is easier and more convenient to use. It reaches out-of-the-way places without difficulty. It costs far less to install and far less to operate. It does not require attention, save lubrication two or three times a year. It has longer life—no Vacuna has ever worn out. It is fool-proof and cannot get out of order; it never needs repairs. It picks up anything small enough to go through the mouth of the cleaning tool—rags, paper, matches, pins, etc., are devoured by the Vacuna. It cannot harm the most delicate fabric.

The Vacuna can be installed in any capacity desired, in any building, new or old. There are no pipes to clog and put the plant out of commission. There is no tearing out of walls and pipes to locate trouble. There is no unwieldy hose to be dragged long distances through rooms and halls, marring furniture and woodwork. The Vacuna is always where you want it, and ready when you want it to perform its work instantly and efficiently.

The best proof you can have of the above statements is to let us refer you to scores of private dwellings, apartment houses, office buildings, hotels, etc., in which central plants have been installed at great expense, but in which Vacunas are being used instead.

Let us put you in touch with our nearest agent, to demonstrate the Vacuna in your own home without expense or obligation.

"Just Nature's Way"

My Beauty Exercises

will make you look Younger and More Beautiful than all the external treatments you might use for a lifetime. My system removes wrinkles and lines, draws up sagging muscles, firms the flesh, rounds out the thin face, makes the complexion fresh as in girlhood—without massage, vibration, astringents, plasters, chin straps, or any appliances whatever—Just Nature's Way. I teach you a method for life.

My system not only reduces double chin, but it LEAVES THE MUSCLES AND FLESH FIRM AFTER THE SUPERFLUOUS FLESH HAS BEEN WORKED AWAY. The too thin neck can also be beautifully rounded and hollows filled out.

No matter how tired, five minutes of my Facial Exercise will freshen your complexion and give it a most exquisite coloring.

The First Woman to teach Scientific Facial Exercise

Does Your Figure Please You?

Your dressmaker can never make a gown look well on you unless you have a good figure and unless you carry it well.

I want to make you realize that your figure and health are almost entirely in your own hands, and that by following my simple, hygienic directions in the privacy of your own room that your whole being vibrates health. I have helped 65,000 of the most refined, intellectual women of America to regain health and good figures; and have taught them how to keep well. Why not you? You are busy, but you can devote a few minutes a day, in the privacy of your own room, to following scientific, hygienic principles of health prescribed to your particular needs.

You Can Be So Well

I have reduced the weight of over 32,000 women and increased the weight of as many more. In my work for reduction or building flesh, I strengthen every vital function so that you are full of life and energy.

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent, and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense. Fully one-third of my pupils are sent to me by those who have worked with me.

I wish you could stand with me at my window for a few minutes and, as the women pass, realize with me how many need better figures, better health. They could have them, too, with just a little daily effort which is easy—not as hard as what they are enduring.

The best physicians are my friends—their wives and daughters are my pupils—the medical magazines advertise my work. Someone in your town knows me. Ask your friends about my work. I am at my desk daily from 8 to 5.

No Drugs—No Medicines

I study each woman's case just as a physician studies it, the only difference being that instead of medicine I strengthen and put in place weakened organs by exercises for nerves and muscles controlling them, bringing a good circulation of warm blood to them, which I purify by teaching correct breathing. I relieve such ailments as

Indigestion Constipation
Anaemia

Sleeplessness Nervousness
Torpid Liver

Catarrh Headaches Weakness

Suffering in Pregnancy Rheumatism

I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly and giving other information of vital interest to women. Write for it and I will also tell you about my work. If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend—at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement for greater culture, refinement and beauty in woman. Sit down and write me NOW. Don't wait—you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience and I should like to tell you about it.

Beautiful women of Spain have been using CREMA PRIMAVERA for years to keep their skins soft and clear. The women of America can now purchase in their own country the cream that has found favor with court beauties of the old world. Small jar $1.00 postpaid.

Jauntiness takes the place of expensive elaboration in this suit of ratine, trimmed with linen. For $2 you may have the pattern, complete.

A "NON-STOCK SPECIAL" PATTERN

THIS is a gown selected at random from the exclusive, but not expensive designs shown in Vogue's famous department, "Smart Fashions for Limited Incomes."

ALL the year round Vogue publishes in this department a selection of costumes for the woman of not unlimited income, and in order to make this service of still greater and more practical value, produces a special kind of pattern—"Non-Stock Specials"—from the models published in "Smart Fashions for Limited Incomes."

THESE "Non-Stock Special" patterns, while they represent the advance of the reigning mode and conform to the principle so often pointed out by Vogue, that the best possible economy in clothes is to secure them in advance of the fashion, represent, however, as a rule, the simpler and more conservative models. Such gowns will hold their style indefinitely; whereas, the gown made in waning or a not too successful style will be hopelessly out of fashion long before it is worn out.

IF you are interested in the problem of how, with economy, to dress above the dead level of the commonplace, turn to page 52 of this number of Vogue, read what is said in the department "Smart Fashions for Limited Incomes" and decide whether one or more of these "Non-Stock Special" pattern gowns will not be an economical, pretty, and desirable addition to your Summer wardrobe.

"NON-STOCK SPECIAL" patterns, cut in stock sizes only (34 to 40 bust), come flat—not pinned—priced at $2 for a complete gown, $1 for skirt or waist, and $1.50 for a three-quarter length coat, wrap, or negligee.

Clever! Clever! Clever!

Dodo's Daughter

By E. F. Benson, Author of "Dodo"

Do you remember "Dodo" and the sensation she made?

"No one ever wrote chatter as Mr. Benson writes it—brilliant, inconsequent, nonsensical chatter, such as persons might actually talk if they were clever enough."

"'Dodo's Daughter' is a kind of glorified nonsense, but it has the juice of life in it, and it has the power of making you feel entirely content as you read."

So writes Hildegard Hawthorne in the New York Times Review of Books.

Idle Wives

By James Oppenheim

What of the married woman whose house and children are cared for by efficient hirelings and whose husband is too feverishly engrossed in money-getting to need her? This is the problem of Anne Wall, who dynamites the situation by leaving her husband and working as a probation officer with the unfortunates of the underworld.

Mr. Oppenheim writes at the white-heat of passionate earnestness. In "Idle Wives" he has achieved one of those rare and compelling novels that put a spell upon the reader.

Anthony the Absolute

By Samuel Merwin

Whom The Bookman ranks as "An American William J. Locke, who has performed the miracle of possessing himself of the delicious, whimsical, elusive humor of Marcus Ordeyne and the Belovèd Vagabond"

"A story of action and suspense and unflagging interest," the scenes set in China. "Anthony," says the critic of the Review of Books of The Times, "is an original conception; and he stands out from the pages of the journal containing his story clearly and positively, with an individuality so strong, so fresh, and pleasing, that it takes only a few pages to make the reader glad of his acquaintance."

The Things He Wrote to Her

By Richard Wightman

Firstword

On a certain planet, once upon a time, dwelt a man and a woman. Both were alive; both were human. One day, in the strange, wide path of Chance, they came face to face and looked into each other's eyes. After that, for a long time, they were seldom in the same neighborhood, and, besides, the hard hands of Conventionality and what is called Law built high fences between them, frequently rendering necessary some means of communication other than speech. What the man wrote to the woman is in this book. What the woman wrote to the man is not in this book. Not all things that happen are set down. It is better so.

Such love-letters as these, filled with understanding and with poetry, very few men have written; but every woman in her secret heart has longed to receive.

F ICTION—not ordinary, commonplace fiction, but fiction that gives you pleasure without wasting your time—is a feature of Harper's Weekly. If you know

John Galsworthy

You know the kind we mean. A series of ten stories by Galsworthy began in the issue of April 18. The characters who figure in this series are socially "smart," and Vogue readers will be keenly interested in their doings, their views and their sayings.

Guy Pene Du Bois, whose fame rests upon his drawings of society people, has cleverly illustrated the series.

In order to introduce Harper's Weekly to Vogue readers, we make this special offer—Send us only $1.00, and we will mail you the Weekly regularly for 16 weeks, and in addition give you without charge all the previous issues containing Galsworthy's stories. Use the coupon below at once.

This Coupon Must Be Mailed Before May 15th

U NDER the brilliant editorship of Norman Hapgood, Harper's Weekly has become the most distinguished publication in this country. Mr. Hapgood has long been recognized as the leading publicist of America. His wide acquaintance with public men, his grip on the questions of the day, his high ideals, his fearlessness, and his remarkable gift of vigorous and lucid expression give him a commanding place among contemporary journalists.

His regular editorials lend to Harper's Weekly the distinctive flavor of a dynamic personality. Sometimes they charm, sometimes bite, and at times they crush; but they are always fair, always stimulating and always highly interesting.

Women's activities are broadly and sympathetically treated in Harper's Weekly. Such eminent authorities as Ellen Key, Mary Austin and Havelock Ellis have recently contributed widely quoted articles on some of the great questions with which women are now displaying increasing concern.

Harper's Weekly has also secured the exclusive rights to everything published by Madam Montessori during the coming year, and will conduct a department devoted to her wonderful educational system. This feature alone will make the Weekly invaluable to mothers who are facing the difficult problems incident to the education of the young folk.

A contributor who has much of intensely practical importance to say to women readers is Professor Lewis B. Allyn, whose aggressive work in the cause of pure food while chemist of the Westfield, Mass., Board of Health, brought him national renown. Articles on the subject on which Professor Allyn is so eminent an authority frequently appear and he regularly contributes notes on new and interesting phases of the food question, together with practical advice regarding diet and health.

If you have not already made the acquaintance of Harper's Weekly, you should do so at once. Progressive, constructive, informative, entertaining, it is the ideal publication for the woman who is mentally alert and desirous of keeping in touch with the vital phases of contemporary life.

A Typical Experience

Here is a quotation from a letter already received. It tells a very simple, every-day experience, very much what you may have had with the Shopping Service.

"In January I found I needed some new luncheon napkins. I did not wish to spend the extra money ($1.50) to go to town just then. Suddenly I thought of the bargains in table linen I had been reading about the day before in Vogue. I got out my magazine, found just what I wanted, and the price was surprisingly low—only $2.25 a dozen.

"Well, I wrote to Vogue, sending a Post Office order, and asked you to buy the napkins for me. They arrived and were of a quality unthought of for such a price. I was so pleased that I wasn't satisfied until I had compared them with some a friend had bought for $5. I could hardly make her believe what mine had cost, for the quality was exactly the same.

"Now she tells me that every time she looks at her napkins she is unhappy, for she thinks of mine and what I paid for them."

June 10th will be the last day for receiving letters. Vogue will publish as many of them as it pleases, either in whole or in part; but the names of the writers will not be published. It makes it much more easy to read and pass upon your letter if it is typewritten, or at least very plainly written, and on but one side of the paper. No letters will be returned. Prize winners will be notified June 30th.

ELECTRIC
Society's Town Car

In Hilly Cities—there are more Detroit Electrics than any other make

Hilly cities provide the supreme test for any electric car—for its power, its speed, its economy. And the electric that leads all others on the hills is all the more desirable for level cities. As evidence, every third electric car sold today is a Detroit Electric.

In every hilly city in the United States you find more Detroit Electrics than any other make. 74 per cent. of the electric cars in Seattle are Detroit Electrics. They lead also in Kansas City, in Cincinnati, in San Francisco, in the hilly residence suburbs of Boston and Philadelphia.

In choosing your car, consider the electric with the record for greatest success on hills and in level cities alike. Detroit Electric catalog and the name of your nearest dealer on request.

The Futurist Idea in Furniture?

What the Futurist Movement is to Art, this fresh, charming Kittinger style is to furniture. It expresses the new spirit of Freedom abroad today. It is a daring, original style, a new American furniture whose lines upset traditions, whose angles shock and delight you. It has the freshness, the joyousness of the whole outdoors, and a daintiness and refinement that is rare in any furniture.

Kittinger Furniture

is for your more unconventional uses—for the bungalow, summer home or cottage, your sun room, wide porches, the morning room, the boudoir, the more intimate "family" rooms. The oak is finished in silver gray tones that fit in with the rakishness of the design; smooth Scotch grays, darker than the silver, exquisite enamels, white and gray and ivory, that enhance its daintiness; and all shades of lovely woody browns. Cane is paneled into the most unexpected places; and wonderfully imaginative, boldly colored cretonnes cover the upholstery. Kittinger furniture yields to many beautiful decorative schemes.

A new, highly resistant wax finish makes it water, stain and fade-proof, a particularly hardy furniture for the sun and the outdoors. It costs less than you probably pay for your ordinary furniture. Obtainable of your own dealer. Watch for his announcement of KITTINGER FURNITURE WEEK. Booklet sent on request.

"You've been using my Pebeco!"

Just as bodily health causes a healthy, wholesome complexion, so mouth health keeps the teeth sound and white and the breath untainted.

The finest complexion, the most engaging personality of man or woman suffer a terrible handicap if teeth and breath are bad.

Pebeco keeps good teeth lustrous, pearly, immaculately white, because it overcomes the mouth-acids that cause decay and discoloration. For though you do not realize their presence, yet the chances are 20 to 1 (so dental authorities agree) that the acids in your mouth are slowly eating into your tooth enamel and making openings for the decay-germs to enter and make cavities in the softer interior of the teeth.

Pebeco is specially made to overcome this all-but-universal acid condition of the mouth, as well as to do all and more than ordinary "toilet article" dentifrices do in cleansing, polishing and whitening the teeth. Its superiority as a complete dentifrice is due to this double service. Pebeco cleans the teeth and saves them.

Send for FREE 10-Day Trial Tube and Acid Test Papers and prove by actual test that Pebeco Tooth Paste is a scientific tooth preserver, and a beautifier and purifier of the breath, the use of which is a distinct pleasure. Pebeco originated in the hygienic laboratories of P. Beiersdorf & Co., Hamburg, Germany, and is sold by your druggist in extra-large, economical tubes that save money as well as teeth. Try it.
